The Planter's Daughter;

Or, The Queen of Belle River.

CHAPTER XIV.

Rosalie's content was undisturbed and perfect. She had not witnessed India's fainting. She knew of it, but ascribed it to heat and over-excitement. She never once associated the swoon of the bride with the meeting of her former lover. The simple Integrity of her heart shielded her from imagining that India could have given her hand to one man while cherishing a thenceforth guilty preference for another. She heard and entirely believed India's own explanation of her swoon—"the closeness of the room." Rosalie yielded up her soul to serene joy. That night in her prayers she returned earnest thanks for the happiness accorded her. She sought her pillow in the fullness of content. Mark loved her! beyond this she did not care to ask or hope any earthly good. Mark loved her! the thought was perfect peace. Wrapped in it she sweetly fell asleep.

She awoke in the morning with a vague impression of a great happiness sleeping in her heart. Suddenly, with a shock of electric joy, she remembered what it was—Mark loved her! Again, in her morning worship she offered up fervent thanksgiving for this priceless boon of love; and after she had made her simple morning toilet she went downstairs. But still the light of her inward joy brightened all her countenance.

Colonel Ashley, always an early riser, was in the hall when she descended. He met her, smiling. She was smiling, too.

"Well, my bonny girl!" he said, "our mountain breezes are beginning to make the roses bloom on your cheeks. You look very pretty this morning."

"Well," said Rosalie, "how long am I to keep the keys, or when am I to deliver them up to Madame Pepuse?"

"Ask your pretty little mamma; she is likely to know such points of domestic etiquette. Madam does not look very much like the material of which Virginia housewives are composed, I must say."

It was yet early in the morning and she went to "see after" breakfast. Her next visit was to the breakfast room to see that the table was well arranged. "I wonder, after all, if India will like to spend two hours of the early morning in this manner. Finding all in order here, the busy little housewife passed next into that pleasant room near the kitchen and the pantry and fronting upon the garden. Here she found her two little black handmaids with their baskets of raspberries. She praised their diligence and then Rosalie and Rose and engaged in putting them in cut glass dishes when she felt a light hand laid upon her shoulder, and, glancing round, she saw Mark smiling upon her. A sudden blush suffused her beautiful countenance; but she exclaimed, saucily:

"Not even the grace of Paul Pry, to say, 'I hope I don't intrude.'"

"You know you gave me the freedom of this room."

"A privilege which men like you seem inclined to abuse," answered Rosalie, glancing at her gingham gown, holland apron and turned-up sleeves.

"Beautiful in that also, Rosalie. What a charming little peasant you make!"

"I think so, too," said Rose, ingenuously; and then, blushing and laughing: "Oh! I did not mean that; I meant I like this dress and this occupation."

"Shall I help you with this also, Rosalie?"

"Oh, no, thank you! I have nearly done. You may go into the garden and select a bouquet of the sweetest half-blown white rosebuds and heliotrope that you can find as a morning offering to our bride."

"And for you, a posy of heart's-ease," he answered.

Rosalie finished her fruit, ornamenting the edges of the dishes with fresh green leaves. Then she changed her dress for breakfast. When returned he found her standing in the hall waiting for him

She was looking very lovely in her fresh white muslin morning dress without any ornament but her own soft brown ringlets and the bright blush and smile lighted by happiness.

"Here they are!" he said, fondly shewing the flowers.

"An elegant bouquet for the bride!" she exclaimed.

"And a sweet little posy for you," he said, placing the heart's-ease on her bosom.

"Il est a propos n'est ce pas?"

"It is fit."

"There is no language for true thought and strong feeling like our earnest English. But, my Rose! even English has no word to tell how much I love you—how dear you are to me! All last evening, occupied, monopolized as I was, sometimes for a moment I would forget you and then your image would return to me with such a thrill of life and joy as I never felt before. But, Rose! will this dream fade also? Must I wake to find that you cannot go with me through the rough paths of life up which my footsteps have to toil?"

"No, Mark! Believe in me, for I am true. 'Whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God; and the Lord do so to me, and more also, if aught but death part me and thee,'" she said, earnestly.

There was earnest honor as well as deep affection in the broken words wherewith he blessed her, as he led her back into the parlor where all the family were now assembled.

CHAPTER XV.

It was impossible that the discordant elements of social life assembled at Ashley Hall could harmonize. Of the family party gathered around the breakfast table, the pale, beautiful India assumed a mask of smiles—Mr. Ashley wore a look of anxious perplexity, Mark appeared self-possessed. Colonel Ashley was secretly annoyed to find the reunion around the breakfast-table not so cheerful as might have been expected. Mrs. Vivian was vexed at the general tacit antagonism. Nevertheless, she kept up an irregular fire of wit and repartee. Rosalie alone was truly at ease and too much absorbed in her own infinite content to notice signs of disturbance.

When breakfast was over the little lady drew Rosalie off into the piazza and away up to the honeysuckle-shaded end.

"And now, Rose," she asked, "what is it? Your eyes have poured streams of light all breakfast time; they have projected rays wherever they have fallen."

"One should be merry in wedding times!"

"Merry in wedding times! Look here, Rosalie! Some marriages are made in heaven, some on earth, and some—in the other place. But it was not merriment, but profound, still joy. Now, what was it all about?"

"Mark loves me, mamma!" whispered the girl."

"Now, that's the most absurd thing I ever heard!"

Rosalie knew her too well and trusted her too thoroughly to feel any anxiety. She walked behind her, put her arms around her waist, and, bending forward, looked up smilingly into her eyes.

"You needn't think to get the better of me that way, Rose! It is ridiculous, I say! What do you mean to do with this love?"

Rose folded both hands over her bosom with a look of unspeakable content. Both look and gesture were involuntary.

"Aye, heard it away, treasure it deep in your heart, I suppose you mean. Silly girl! Whenever do you expect to be married?"

"Whenever Mark asks me, mamma!"

"It is just madness! He has not a dollar!"

"Yes, he has! All that I have, mamma!"

"Do you imagine that your guardian will give up one cent of your property during your minority? No; he will even stop your allowance."

"Why should he do that? It would be very unjust" said Rosalie, raising her eyebrows with surprise. "Mark's own uncle! He will not pursue him with persecutions!"

"Will he not?"

"No, I will never believe it!"

"He will fill up the measure of his animosity. Clement Sutherland did not appear at the breakfast-table this morning. Can you not surmise the cause? He has many bad reasons for hating his nephew. He hates him for his principles, and, more than all, for having had the power to give up the beautiful India. Clement Sutherland worships his daughter; he hates Mark for not having laid upon her shrine the most precious jewel of his soul—his integrity. And now, with the opposition of your guardian, what have you to expect in giving yourself to Mark Sutherland?"

"I do not know; I shall leave it all to Mark. It is no conditional promise. I have given him the full and complete control of my destiny. All that was within me—heart and soul and spirit—sprang to him when he called me. Mamma, it is a word often abused, but my soul throws it irresistibly upon my lips—I adore Mark. And now, amidst opposition, persecution, desertion, he must know that there is one who will follow wherever he leads—one heart that will cleave to him in joy and sorrow, in life and in death."

At that very instant the boy brought the mail bag and handed Mrs. Vivian a letter. Her face flushed to the forehead; and, for the moment forgetful of Rosalie, she hastened to read it.

While this confidential conversation was going on between the young step-mother and her daughter, another scene transpired in the study of Colonel Ashley. As that gentleman was leaving the breakfast room, a message was brought him from Mr. Clement Sutherland, desiring the favor of a few moments' private conversation with him. Colonel Ashley returned word that he would be pleased to see Mr. Sutherland in his study. Thither he immediately proceeded, and thither soon followed his guest.

"I trust you are in good health this morning, Mr. Sutherland," said the Colonel, urbanely.

"I am well, sir," replied his guest, coldly.

"I was sorry to miss you at the breakfast-table this morning. I trust my little girl made you comfortable in your own apartment?"

"Thank you, sir."

Colonel Ashley was silenced and repelled for a little while by this churlishness, but, speedily recollecting, inquired with some reserve of manner:

"Can I be so happy as to serve you in any way this morning, Mr. Sutherland?"

"Who recommended that young man whom you have engaged as a tutor?" asked Clement Sutherland.

Now, Colonel Ashley might well have been provoked by the abruptness of this question to make some unpleasant answer but he replied with the utmost courtesy. Looking at his guest, he said, slowly and with meaning: "His name recommended him, Mr. Sutherland."

"That is just what I feared. That is the one thing, unhappily, of which we cannot deprive him. Did you know anything of this young man's history?"

"Nothing."

"You fancied him a relative of ours?"

"Certainly."

"Now, will you be so kind as to give me your attention for a few minutes?"

Colonel Ashley settled himself in an attitude of fixed interest and Clement Sutherland commenced a narrative of some considerable length, which left Mark Sutherland with the character of a graceless son, a faithless lover, an unprincipled man and a mad reformer.

"Sir, you should not give him house-room for an hour! He will pervert your children, steal the heart of your niece, sow fatal dissention between your son and his wife, and incite your servants to revolt!"

Colonel Ashley went through all the degrees of incredulity, doubt and alarm, exclaiming, "I should never have believed that of Him! He does not look like an incendiary!"

"Sir, an incendiary does not parade his combustible matter before your eyes, and look like he was going to fire your house!"

"I rather liked the young gentleman, I confess. Mr. Sutherland, I must say that you shock me beyond endurance. You ruthlessly grasp subjects that a man of honor and delicacy scarcely likes to touch. You have dealt severely with the young man, also, in your speech. He may be an enthusiast—enthusiasm is a fault appertaining to youth and genius—and, moreover, persecution is not at all to my taste; it is always the growth of cowardice. I do not fear that my children will be perverted, my heiress maddened, my niece infatuated, or my son and his wife divorced by the presence of this high-souled but mistaken young gentleman. I told you that I liked Mr. Mark Sutherland, and I cannot have him to order. Nevertheless, as it is not expedient that, one formerly betrothed of Mrs. Ashley should be here to annoy her by his presence, I will see the young gentleman and arrange the speedy termination of our engagement."

Mr. Clement Sutherland expressed himself satisfied, arose and left the room.

Colonel Ashley remained in an attitude of serious thought, then he summoned a servant.

"Go," he said to the man that entered, "and request Mr. Mark Sutherland to favor me with his company here for a few moments."

The messenger went out.

AURORA WAS FEARED.

Ancients Looked Upon It as Omen of Direful Slaughter.

Many people believe that the aurora borealis is a phenomenon peculiar to modern times. But this is not true. The ancients used to call it barmatæ, bolides, and trabes, names which expressed the different colors of the lights. The scarlet aurora was looked on by the superstitious barbarians as an omen of direful slaughter; so it is not unusual for descriptions of bloody battles to contain allusions to northern lights. In the annals of Cloon-macnoise it is recorded that in 688 A.D., accompanying a terrible battle between Leinster and Munster, Ireland, a purple aurora lit the northern skies, foretelling the slaughter.

A Long Farewell.

Private Doherty was six feet four in his socks; the sergeant was much shorter. The sergeant looked along the line. "Head up there, Dooley!" he cried. Doherty raised his head. "Up higher," said the little sergeant. "There, that's better. Don't let me see your head down again." "Am I to be always like this?" asked Doherty, staring away above the little sergeant's head. "You are." "Then I'll say good-bye to ye, sergeant, for I'll never see yez again."

Fashion Hints

Ruffles and Fluffles.

Many of the velour coats for children of 10 or 12 years of age are made with considerable fullness, the skirt portion being cut circular, with a straight thread in front and the back seam cut on a true bias.

For juvenile wear, the broad belt remains good style.

A stunning coat of two-toned plush in brown has its skirt part extremely full, the sleeves are set in at the arm seye, and a standing collar of fitch comes up straight and snug about the throat like a bandage. Another coat is heavier trimmed upon a foundation of Joffre blue broadcloth. The belt is novel, as it is very wide under the arms, and narrows front and back. Flat, smoked pearl buttons are used. Wide-wale corduroy, trimmed with black skunk, is employed extensively. It wears well and looks well, and what more can mortal woman ask?

Velvet will predominate this winter and faille will be strong.

Short hooped petticoats are attached to some of the elbbreviated dancing frocks that have come from Bulloz. They produce a flaring silhouette that is very dancy and quaint.

Tulle continues the best material for dancing gowns and designers have found that it is particularly beautiful when draped over metallic tissues. The new evening frocks are elaborately trimmed with paillettes, and unusual laces and embroideries.

A petticoat, which is gorgeous enough to be a frock itself, is made up of peachblow silk, veiled in spangled tulle. The effect of iridescent fish scale spangles, rosy-hued silk and white tulle is flowerlike and beautiful. Another fancy petticoat is made of jetted net over black pussy willow taffeta. The flounce is outlined in close quilling.

A charming costume in Nile green taffeta has the base of the skirt caught up with ovals of pink roses and leaves, giving a scalloped effect to the hem. The short-waisted bodice is decorated with rosebuds—white straps of crystal beads go over the shoulder and end in tassels at front and back. There are very short sleeves of Nile green tulle and a large butterfly bow with sash ends of tulle extends from the centre-back closing. An afternoon dress of black crepe has a princess effect obtained by straight folds hanging from the bust nearly to the hem of the skirt, the fullness being held by a dull gilt girdle. A culfass of taffeta is shirred in crepe and headed by bands of dull gilt. Festooned crepe gives extra fullness to the skirt.

A simple semi-mourning dress on princess lines is of black crepe de chine with collar and cuffs of white organdie embroidered in black.

A model in white striped taffeta, brown and black, is cut with a very deep yoke emplecement front and back, but shortened very materially on the hips. A full, circular skirt joins the yoke and follows its line with two rows of piping on the hem to accentuate the fullness and shortness of the skirt. The chiffon drop sleeves have oversleeves of the silk.

There are two styles of fur coats this year, the coat that fits and the coat that doesn't. Both ripple in gudet folds below the waist.

As for furs, two kinds are in vogue, caracul and Hudson seal, but this is only the first style feature of a fur coat, for they are to be trimmed with a contrasting fur this winter. The collar, which is a big, soft, high choker, into which one can sink the chin; the cuffs, which are wide bands about the long sleeves, and the bottom edge of the fur coat are made of a contrasting fur. This contrasting fur on a Hudson seal coat is generally beaver, otter or nutria.

An attractive boudoir in very pale blue crepe de chine has wide, deep armholes, edged with fringe. The fichu shawl collar is also edged with fringe, which follows down one side of the front opening. On the upper front, over the shoulders, and across the back there is a decorative design in rope silk embroidery of the same color.

Foods for Growing Poultry.

One of the most important things demanding the special attention of the poultry raiser at this season of the year is the matter of developing the young stock and of securing rapid, healthy growth. There are several items of care and management which affect the growth of the young chicks but none is more important than intelligent feeding, and while this is true, it is well to remember that food alone will not accomplish the desired result. Our remarks at this time will be confined to the question of feeding, but we cannot refrain from calling attention to the fact that feeding is not the sole factor, as many people suppose, and who consequently do not get results because of lack of attention to other details.

The list of poultry foods is long and is very generally known. Briefly, it consists of all kinds of grain, whole and ground, including small grains, such as buckwheat, millet, kaffir corn, etc. In addition to the various grains, there is green food, such as grass, clover, alfalfa and all kinds of growing vegetation and all root vegetables. Animal foods form another important group, and under this head may be included all forms of insect life which is usually accessible to fowls that have free range and the meat foods in the form of fresh meat scraps, which many poultry raisers can procure at a reasonable cost.

Bowel Regulators.

There are also various meat meals, beef scraps and concentrated meat foods on the market that are of value if procured and fed in a fresh condition. Oil meal, linseed meal, cottonseed meal, etc., are valuable only as occasional additions to the rations, and they serve principally as bowel regulators. Condiments and similar prepared foods are not necessary and frequently are harmful in their effects. Skimmed milk, buttermilk, and other milk products are of value.

The beginner in poultry raising is bewildered when he starts to investigate the feeding question and is confronted with the long list of available foodstuffs. He is apt to become discouraged if he gains the impression that he must have everything in the list, which is, of course, impossible and undesirable. Each section of the country has its own local conditions, and no matter where the poultry raiser is located, he can find sufficient variety in the foods at hand to serve his needs. He should not be misled into thinking that there is a set formula comprising a few special feeds, which is better than any other combination that can be secured. We make that statement because readers of poultry literature have no doubt found certain combinations described and recommended as being the most satisfactory and productive of greatest results. They are therefore and do not know what course to follow. For the benefit of all such breeders and those who have not yet learned the facts, we wish to state that there is no one formula which can be said to be positively the best under any and all conditions. What has been said thus far applies to the food question in general, regardless of whether the object be to obtain in young stock or for any other special purpose.

Feeding for growth requires different rations than would be the case if the object was to fatten fowls or to encourage egg production. The mistake which most people make is to assume that flesh-producing foods, or rather fattening foods, are more desirable for growth than any others. They overlook the fact that growth means the development of bone and muscle quite as much as it does additional flesh and especially fat. Young chicks intended for broilers or fries may be confined and pushed to the limit with corn and other fattening rations, but much handling fits them only for table poultry, and they are ruined for other purposes. The young stock should be given as much range as possible, and the poultry raiser should start his plans with that thought in mind. A plentiful supply of green food should be within reach, and if it is not growing in the runs or yards, it should be supplied from the list of articles previously mentioned.

Good General Formula.

Readers who prefer to have a regular formula and who do not wish to be bothered with trying to provide a changing variety will find the following a most excellent combination: Cracked wheat, 25 parts; pinhead oatmeal, 15 parts; millet seed, 10 parts; granulated charcoal, 5 parts; chick size grit, 10 parts; buckwheat, 5 parts; rape seed, 5 parts; broken rice, 5 parts; cracked peas, 5 parts, and ground beef scraps or other meat meal, 5 parts. Some of the above articles are not easily obtainable in all localities, and the mixture should be made with the ingredients at hand and considering cost. A dry mash consisting of ground wheat, corn and oats may be kept in hoppers where the chick can go to it at will. A little granulated charcoal and cuttonseed meal make a desirable addition to the dry mash; the former sweetens the crop and aids digestion and the latter is a good regulator.

WILL USE PRUNING KNIFE.

British Government Will Cut Down Expenses.

That the British Government actually means business in its inauguration of a national campaign of thift is proven by the fact that, when, in the House of Lords, a resolution was moved in favor of economy in public expenditure—the mover, Lord Middleton, sharply criticising many important items—the Government, instead of resenting the action, actually accepted the resolution and made the vote in its favor unanimous. Lord Lansdowne, a prominent member of the Government, while declaring that the first rush of preparation for war meant extravagance and loss, yet admitted frankly that there were ways in which present expenditures could be curtailed, and promised that the resolution in favor of economy should bear early fruit in the way of real economies. It is pointed out by the Economist, one of the greatest authorities on financial questions in the world, that the expenditure of the Government has immensely increased on many new services, while old services, on which economies might be expected, call for just as much money as ever. The wisdom of much of the new expenditure is sharply questioned and the use of the pruning knife to bring the whole tree of public expenditure down to the requirements fixed by present conditions is strongly recommended.

MOLASSES AS MUNITIONS.

Large Quantities Wanted for Making Explosives.

There has been an unprecedented demand in the United States recently for blackstrap molasses. It is needed in making alcohol and is part of a formula for the manufacture of powder.

A Cincinnati dealer in sweets placed an order for ten tanks of 8,000 gallons each, or a total of 80,000 gallons of this blackstrap grade of Cuban molasses that is to be used by a large powder concern in the making of explosives for war purposes.

The price of blackstrap molasses has doubled since the orders began pouring in from the powder mills.

This is the third large order that has been placed by the dealer within a few days.

As to where the powder is to be used he does not know, only that he also has received other orders for future delivery, and the sales are being made to several powder manufacturers not only near Cincinnati, but in other parts of the country.

TORTURING SCIATICA

Fierce darting pains—pains like red hot needles being driven through the flesh—in the thigh; perhaps down the legs to the ankles — that's sciatica. None but the victim can realise the torture. But the sufferer need not grow discouraged for there is a cure in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These pills make new, rich, red blood, which soothes and strengthens the feeble nerves, and thus frees them from pain and restores the sufferer to cheerful activity. In proof we give the statement of Mr. Thos. D. Leinster, Wapella, Sask., who says: "I was attacked with sciatica which gradually grew worse until I was confined to my bed; for three months I had to be shifted and turned in my bed as I was utterly unable to help myself. I suffered the greatest torture from the fierce, stabbing pains that accompanied every movement. I consulted several doctors and took drugs and medicines until I was nauseated, but without getting any benefit, and I began to believe I would be a continuous sufferer. Finally I was prevailed upon to use Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and after taking them for about six weeks I was able to get out of bed. From that on I kept steadily improving until I was free from this terrible and painful malady."

The most stubborn cases of sciatica will yield to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills if the treatment is persisted in. These pills are sold by all medicine dealers or will be sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by addressing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

AN APPEAL

On Behalf of the National Canadian Patriotic Fund.

We have now entered upon the second year of the war, and the end seems as far off as ever. No one imagined, a year ago, that by September of 1915 Canada would have sent across the Atlantic nearly one hundred thousand men with as many more to follow if necessary. This magnificent enlistment, while primarily due to the loyalty of our people, has been, in a large measure, made possible by the Canadian Patriotic Fund.

This greatest of all the national benefactions is now assisting twenty thousand families of men who have enlisted for overseas service. These men have gone forward with the full assurance that the people of Canada will see to it that during their absence their wives, widowed mothers, and little children shall be maintained in comfort. We trust that the strain upon the Fund is assuming large proportions, that to meet the needs of July and August $700,000 was expended, that the reserves are being materially decreased, and that the national Executive Committee now finds it necessary to make a further appeal to the Canadian Public.

There are many funds, most of them worthy, but of them all the Patriotic Fund is the one we cannot allow to fail. It is the duty of the Government to arm, equip and maintain the troops. Not a dollar do the Federal authorities give to the Patriotic Fund. This work depends solely on the patriotism and generosity of our own people. Thousands of brave men are fighting our battles, believing that we meant what we said when we told them as they went forward:—"Go and we will care for the wife and kiddies." It would be to our everlasting disgrace if our pledge were broken.

The national organization, with headquarters at Ottawa and branches or affiliated associations in every part of the Dominion, is worthy of our most generous support in the tremendous and ever-growing task that it has undertaken.

Ottawa, Sept. 1st, 1915.

A DETERMINED WOMAN

Finally Found a Food that Helped Her.

"When I first read of the remarkable effects of Grape-Nuts food, I determined to secure some," says a western woman. "At that time there was none kept in this town, but my husband ordered some from a commercial traveller.

"I had been greatly afflicted with sudden attacks of cramps, nausea, and vomiting. Tried all sorts of remedies and physicians, but obtained only temporary relief. As soon as I began to use Grape-Nuts the cramps disappeared entirely. I am to-day perfectly well, can eat anything and everything I wish, without paying the penalty that I used to. We would not keep house without Grape-Nuts.

"My husband was so delighted with the benefits I received that he has been recommending Grape-Nuts to his customers and has built up a very large trade on the food. He sells it to many of the leading physicians of the county, who recommend Grape-Nuts very generally. There is some satisfaction in using a really scientifically prepared food." "There's a Reason."

CURIOSITIES OF NATURE.

Strange Questions and Stranger Answers.

Curious, indeed, were some of the beliefs of our forefathers, to judge from the little volume, entitled "Curiosities of Nature," published in 1637. Like most books of the olden days this one is dedicated to a peer—in this case to "The Right Honorable William Lord Craven, Baron of Hamsted, &c.," and the author, after requesting "gracious protection," tells his patron that his "handful of Curiosities" is "devoted unto you by the Heart and Hand of a Student, Traveller and Souldier."

A.—Because her eyelids are not large enough to cover her eyes. The like also is it, as many doe report with many other animals, as the Lyon himself.

Classification of subjects did not trouble the author, to judge from these three questions and answers, which follow one another:—

Q.—What is the hardest thing to be learned?

A.—To learn to know himselfe.

Q.—What dost cast from it a greater heate than fire?

A.—Beauty, which setteth pot onely on fire those that touch it, but also those that a farre off doe behold it.

Q.—Why doe Pullets (their throats being cut) survive after it longer than men?

A.—Chickens and Pullets have smaller sinews and veines, and therefore life cannot so soone leave them.

Q.—Why doe men seek to avoyde poverty?

Women come in for their full share of notice, but alas! our author does not appear to have held them in very high esteem. For instance:—

Q.—Why are women more covetous, more crafty, and more revengeful than men?

A.—By reason of the weakness of their nature; for being not able by force to support and maintaine themselves, they betake themselves to craft, covetousness and discord, which Caesar said was the Mother of Assurance.

But neither men nor women can become but headed. Note this:—

Q.—Why did nature make rather the braine cold than hot

A.—For this main reason only: to temper and moderate the heate of the heart, to the end it might serve in stead of a Fan or cooler.

Marriage is summed up pithily as follows:—

Q.—What is marriage?

A.—A Paradise on earth if her laws be observed, but a hell in the house if her statutes be broken.

But perhaps the finest thing in the book relates to the "invention" of kissing, a matter about which many sweethearts have no doubt had their arguments. Here are the facts, as set forth under the heading "Of kissing, a token of Love":—

Q.—How is it that this act is so much esteemed and used of Lovers?

A.—This was first invented by the Trojan Wives, who being tyred with the long and tedious travailes by Sea, and being now arrived in the pleasant Country of Italy, and loath that their Husbands should any more put to Sea, concluded amongst themselves that while their Husbands were now a shoare, busied in the Conquest of that Countrey, they would fire the ships, and by that means to quit themselves of the fear of any further travailers, which they put in effect. But when they considered the high displeasure of their husbands likely to come upon them with Death, they resolved upon this way of pacification; which was, that at the returne of them, every wife should use this kind of welcome, by kissing him on the Lippes, which before that time was not used and knowne; which when the men perceived, wondering and amazed at this novelty of embraces, became indulgent to them, and pacified; whereupon, since that, it never went out of use, but grew rather more and more in request.

WILD HOGS AS WATCHDOGS.

In Mexico Will Fight Off Coyotes or Other Wild Animals.

In some parts of Mexico the wild hogs, which the natives call jabalis—hah-hah-lee—savage beasts in their natural state, are used as watchdogs. If they are caught young and brought up with goats they will go out into the hills with the herd and fight off coyotes or other wild animals; if they are raised with chickens they will protect them, and round a ranch-house at night they are as useful as any dog.

Although fierce by nature, they can be tamed until they follow their master round like a dog. The landlord of a hotel in one of the border towns even keeps one of the wild hogs as a playmate for his baby son.

The jabali is only first cousin, however, to the domestic pig. Swine are divided into two main branches: in one line is the farmer's pig, descended from the wild hog of Europe, and in the other is the jabali, which is really a peccary. But the jabali is quite "pigsy" enough, with his small, flexible snout, long, mottled bristles and long, sharp tusks.

TO DEFY UNDERSEA DANGERS.

Apparatus Which Estimates the Distance of Icebergs.

A marine signalling apparatus which it is believed will diminish sea disasters consists of an electric oscillator which announces the presence of another vessel, locates icebergs, indicates sea depths, and provides for the transmission of submarine telephone and telegraph messages.

The device consists principally of a twenty-four inch metal diaphragm attached to a cylindrical case, within which is an electromagnet actuating a copper sounder. The oscillators, when in permanent position, are placed inside of a ship's skin, beneath the water line, on both the port and starboard sides. Vibrations of the diaphragm amounting to a movement of one-thousandth part of an inch and repeated with great rapidity throw out sound waves under the water, which may be caught by the receiving apparatus on another vessel.

Signals of this kind have been heard at a distance of thirty miles, while at shorter ranges numerous telegraphic conversations have been carried on successfully. In one instance the experimenters actually talked between two ships. In locating icebergs it is the echo which gives warning of the presence of danger.

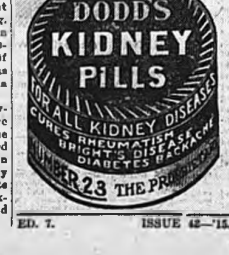
With a stop watch it is possible to estimate quite accurately the distance of these barriers.

Vital Healing Power Fills the System And Health Returns

A crowning curative triumph in medicine is now given to the world, and all who have been sufferers from stomach ailments, indigestion and headache can be cured quickly by a purely vegetable remedy. Calomel, salts and such like are no longer necessary. They are harsh and disagreeable. Science has devised something far superior, and you can go to-day with 25c. to any druggist and buy a box of Dr. Hamilton's Pills which are considered the very quickest and safest cure for the stomach, bowels, liver and kidneys. Half sick men and women who scarcely know what ails them will be given a new lease of life with Dr. Hamilton's Pills. Depressed spirits disappear, headaches are forgotten, appetite increases, blood is purified and enriched, pains at the base of the spine are cured, the nerves are toned up, ambition to work is increased, and day by day the old-time health and vigor return. A trial only is necessary to prove how beneficial Dr. Hamilton's Pills are to all who are weak, nervous, thin, depressed or in failing health.

THE BEGGARS' PARADISE.

They Travel Free on Passenger Boats in China.



In China begging is in the nature of an art, and the various sorts of supplicants have been classified, until now it is known that there are at least thirty classes of travelling mendicants.

The passenger boats know them and do not attempt to collect passage money, for they sleep on the open deck, and, curiously enough, pay for whatever rice they require. This being the case, rather than have any trouble with them and gain their enmity, the boatmen allow them free passage.

When they reach the city they put up at the beggar hotel near the Big Pagoda and let the beggar headman know of their arrival. Soon the regular allowance is forthcoming and the man spends a few days in pursuit of pleasure and then moves on to another place to repeat the same proceeding.

His Daughter in Luck.

Paterfamilias (furiously) — "You scoundrel! Why did you elope with my daughter?" New Son-in-Law—"To avoid the insufferable fuss and nonsense of a society wedding." Paterfamilias (beaming) — "Thank Heaven, my daughter has got a sensible husband, anyhow."

Every Stiff Joint Limbered, Rheumatism Cured!

CURES NEURALGIA, BACKACHE, LUMBAGO.

Rheumatism to-day is unnecessary. It is so well understood and so readily curable that every day we have reports of old chronics being freed of their tormenter.

"I can speak confidently of the Nerviline treatment, for the simple reason that it cured me," writes Albert H. Cornelius, from Kingston. "You can't imagine how stiff and lame and sore I was. Nights at a time I couldn't sleep well. I followed the Nerviline directions carefully—had it rubbed into the sore regions four or five times every day. Every rubbing helped to reduce the pain. The swelling went down. I got a fair measure of relief in a week. I also took two Ferrozone Tablets with my meals. They increased my appetite and spirits, purified my blood and toned up my system generally.

"I am as well to-day as a man could be—in perfect good health. I give Nerviline all the credit."

A large family size bottle of Nerviline costs only 50c., or the trial size 25c., and is useful in a hundred ills in the family. Whether it's toothache, earache, headache, neuralgia, lame back or a cold, Nerviline will cure just as readily as it will cure rheumatism. For family use nothing equals Nerviline.

MOTHER.

In the darkness of night,
With the bright stars above,
The boy-soldier thinks
Of the mother he loves,
Whom he left far away,
And to whom he is worth more than gold.

Is the value too high?
Then some dear mother try,
Whom has sent out her son
As her share of the fight
For the cause of the right,
And, God willing, he'll never return.

There are things on this earth,
Who can value their worth?
Like a mother. And when it's her son,
Then her heart strings are torn
For the one she has borne,
That the country has called to its side.

"The Lord gave the child,"
She did say through the pain,
As she grasped her fair son to her breast.
But God knows of her claim,
He'll come home, 'haps, again,
Though the servant of hell does his worst.

There are things on this earth,
So wise Solomon said,
Were beyond him. How can man define
Why a mother's weak arm
Can a nation's thrall break,

Think then of mothers,—
The ones who have lost
Their all in this world,—"my son,"
Bow down in your reverence
And give praise to God
That through mother your battles are won.

The Maid's Decision.

"We are to have a Jewish rabbi for dinner to-day," said a lady to her servant. For a moment the maid surveyed her mistress in grim silence. Then she spoke with decision. "All I have to say is," she announced, "if you have a Jewish rabbi for dinner you'll cook it yourself!"

How to Cook Roman Meal Porridge.

Invariably use double boiler, or set boiler in basin of boiling water. Have water boiling in both vessels, that in inner one salted to taste. Slowly stir in one cup Roman Meal to each two cups water. Cover, set in outer vessel, and never stir again even while serving. For early breakfast cook at evening meal and warm in morning, using a little less Roman Meal. It's a dark nut-brown, granular, rich porridge. It Nourishes better than meat, prevents indigestion and positively relieves constipation or "money back." Ask your doctor. A Powerful Geyser.

The Waimangu Geyser near Rotorua, in New Zealand, the largest geyser on the island, which in its period of eruption threw huge columns of water, black mud, rocks, and stones to a height of fifteen hundred feet and more, but which for the past eleven years has remained quiet, has again become active. It recently blew out a new crater, eighty yards long by seventy-five yards wide, and about twenty feet deep. In that first explosion, during which it hurled mud and stones more than a thousand feet into the air, it formed twenty mud "boilers" that threw mud thirty feet high, and opened seven broad steam holes, from which steam escaped under great pressure. Some of the sand and mud that it sent up was, it is said, carried as far as Lake Rotomahana, three and a half miles away. At last accounts, jets of steam were issuing from the many fissures in the crater wall.

KNEW BRITAIN RULED WAVES.

Count Von Reventlow Apologizes for German Fleet's Inactivity.

Count Von Reventlow, the naval expert of the Tages Zeitung newspaper, in an article on the comparative strength of the British and German fleets, says in part:

"No one cognizant of the circumstances doubted an instant at the beginning of the war, or before, that it would be impossible to dispute with success British mastery of the ocean. If the building programme of the German fleet had been further advanced at the beginning of the war, and if instead of a slackening in building in consequence of Viscount Haldane's negotiations the buildings had been accelerated, and if it had been possible to continue this acceleration for a series of years the situation unquestionably would have been better. But the British may thank their superiority not alone because of their great numerical superiority but because of their geographical position."

The British, Count Reventlow says, have as a base a long line of coast with many harbors and supporting points, against which the Germans have only one point in the restricted Holland triangle, and the German fleet, therefore, will always be in a position of strategic inferiority until this condition is remedied. The writer backs the demand made by Albert Ballin, managing director of the Hamburg-American Line, made some months ago, that Germany at the end of the war must have a more extended base line.

Trained Crabs Catch Rabbits.

Crabs are put to a curious use on certain parts of the Devonshire (England) foreshore. They are used to catch rabbits. Having located a promising burrow, the snarer takes a crab and affixes a short length of lighted candle to the back of its shell. The behavior of the crab which finds itself in a narrow inclosure is well known. It begins to run. It therefore starts away up the burrow at top rate, and presently the rabbit is horrified at the sight of a jog-trotting flame coming to his sanctuary. Off he goes for the other exit, only to find himself, when he emerges, in a trap.

Had a Right There.

A man arrested for stealing chickens was brought to trial. The case was given to the jury, who brought him in guilty, and the judge sentenced him to three months' imprisonment. The jailer was a jovial man, fond of a smile, and, feeling particularly good on that particular day, considered himself insulted when the prisoner, looking around the cell, told him it was dirty and not fit for a hog to be put in. One word brought on another till finally the jailer told the prisoner if he did not behave he would put him out. To which the prisoner replied: "I will give you to understand, sir, I have as good a right here as you have!"

TENTH CON. BRUCE

Fall plowing is in full swing. The wet ground and long stubble is causing the farmers a good deal of trouble.

We are pleased to see Mrs J Anness able to be out and around again.

Mr Jos Irwin has been on the sick list for the past week. We hope to soon see him in his usual good health.

The horsebuyers of Paisley and other outside points are picking up a number of good animals in this vicinity. As a general rule the buyers are a good deal bigger than the prices they are offering.

Mr and Mrs Chas McDonald are visiting friends in Durham, Priceville and Orillia. Charlie says farming isn't worth a diddle if a man can't take a week's holidays every six months. That expresses our sentiments exactly only we would like to have six months' holidays twice a year.

The farmers have been jubilant over the high prices that have been paid for hogs during the past summer and fall. Nine-and-a-half cents a pound for live hogs is a good price. But when you take out a load of hogs and pay for all the frills and trimmings the buyer and packer impose on you there is not so much left to blow about. When your hogs are above a certain weight they dock you and when they are below a certain weight they dock you. Then there is the tuberculosis tax to pay for inspection. No doubt a good many farmers would like to know what fund this tax goes into. We all know the government pays an inspector out of our good money for looking after all diseased animals. So the point in question is, where does the rake-off go that is mulcted out of the farmer every time he makes a sale. It looks to be either one of two things: we are either paying the inspector a second salary or else the packer is swelling his bank account at the expense of the farmer. An explanation of this point from somebody who is on the inside track and who thoroughly understands the situation would be appreciated by scores of farmers.

We must say the Canadian red squirrel has a good champion in the gentleman who signed himself "Sport" in the last issue of The Advocate. We would just like to inform our critic that it was a scrub hunt that was intended to be indulged in. Whether that includes squirrels or not I am not prepared to say as I have never taken part in any of the contests that have been held in this vicinity. However, after the 5th of November I hope to be able to tell you more about the rules of the game. I feel towards the squirrel (especially two that are around the barn at the present time) something like Peter McArthur of literary fame did when he was writing about the wanton destructiveness of the rabbit. He said they were good for one thing and that was good for nothing. I think the squirrel is in the same box as the rabbit. I must thank "Sport" for the kindly way he spoke of the members of Underwood Lodge. As to their loyalty and patriotic spirit Underwood Lodge has decided to give the entire proceeds of the scrub hunt (and that will be no small amount) to the Red Cross Society. A short time ago they also subscribed and sent away $5 worth of tobacco to our Canadian soldiers at the front. Our critic would almost make you believe that we were backward in defending our country by not going to London to enlist and learn to shoot Germans. There are a good many ways of doing your part for your country besides shouldering a musket and fighting in Flanders. Take Britain for example. Their experienced farm foremen, shepherds, teamsters and such like are being encouraged by those in authority to stick to their work rather than enlist. But you see right here in Canada such men are jeered at because they have not enlisted. Those who realize how important it is that foodstuffs be supplied and are supplying it are doing their bit for their own and their mother country in such a way that they should be encouraged in it rather than be insulted and called cowards. But,

If I knew you and you knew me,
'Tis seldom we would disagree,
But never having yet clasped hands
That each intends to do what's right
And treat each other "honor bright."
How little to complain there'd be
If I knew you and you knew me.

WALKERTON

At the last regular meeting of the South Bruce Women's Institute the ladies were able to announce that enough money had been collected to pay for the field kitchen with equipment which they had presented to the 71st Battalion. A resolution was passed thanking everyone who had contributed to this fund, thus helping to make the gift possible. The collectors made special mention of the kindness and hospitality they received as they went from home to home. There are still some districts where the collectors have not been and the ladies are in hopes that by the time the ground has all been gone over the $1000 they aimed to realize will be realized. The remaining $500 is to be used to provide comforts for the soldiers at the front and for Red Cross work.

The Hanover house-boat which became famous for its booze exploits and for the fact that the trio who conducted it were mulcted nearly $1100 in the courts for their connection with this floating boozery, now rides on the billows and quenches thirsts no more, for somebody whose apparent zeal and piety is only surpassed by his colossal supply of unadulterated nerve, entered the house-boat at an unknown hour last week and filled it fuller than a bees' hive with holes. As the Saugeen rushed in the old moisture plant went down, and only the roof sticking like a periscope above the waves now tells where many a Sabbath joy lies buried. As it is fishes now frolic in the rooms where the corks once popped and the suds once flowed. But two of the mulcted trio, it is said, will not even behold this small remnant of their old love unless they return again to the scenes they are reported to have deserted after the levying of the fine.

The fact that there were only 15 births as compared with 20 deaths in Walkerton for the past three months, shows that the grim reaper is beating out the stork at the rate of 20 heads a year. If this thing keeps up the town would be obliterated in 150 years, the schools would close and the churches cease operation in 140 years, the hotels would go out of business in 130 years, and the last newspaper would quit in 130 years. If this last catastrophe should happen the town council would start pasturing cattle on the front street to keep down the grass and the merchants would be drawing the blinds to keep outsiders from joking about trade. The trains would forget to stop at the town and the only thing Walkerton would be good for would be for getting out of. All this would come to pass, and more, if the record of the past three months is kept up. Surely we are not overstating the case, or bearing false witness against our neighbor when we say "It is time for a change."—Herald and Times.

Word came last week from the west of the death of Mrs Hugh McFadyen. Her maiden name was Cecelia Ferris, a daughter of Mr Jos Ferris, on the boundary.

Our quiet burg has been disturbed on two different occasions lately by two young men who live in our neighborhood. They have taken a great notion to serenade our village in the middle of the night, when the inhabitants are peacefully sleeping. We sometimes hear the expression "too full for utterance," but in their case the latter clause can be reversed. These young men are not satisfied with exercising their vocal organs on the street, but they make midnight calls on people and even knock at windows of sick rooms. I wonder how long people have to stand this sort of thing. No one seems to take any action to stop them.

OBITUARY

The late Henry Dier, who passed away at his home in Saugeen Tp last week was born in the County of Wexford, Ireland, in 1831, coming to Canada in 1854. His first place of residence was in Westport, Leeds County, Ont. In 1862 he married Janet Porter of Westport, and moved on to a farm near there, where he resided for fourteen years. He then moved on a larger farm in Lanark county near Perth, where he lived eighteen years. After selling his farm in Lanark he moved to Bruce county where he lived until his death, October 2nd. The late Mr Dier was a man of retiring disposition, being well liked and highly esteemed by all who knew him. In politics he was a Conservative and in religion an Anglican. SUFFERED EVERYTHING

Canadian women are continually writing us such letters as the two following, which are heartfelt expressions of gratitude for restored health:

Glanford Station, Ont.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and never found any medicine to compare with it. I had ulcers and falling of womb and doctors did me no good. I suffered dreadfully for years until I began taking your medicine. I also recommend it for nervousness and indigestion." — Mrs. Henry Clark, Glanford Station, Ont.

Chesterville, Ont. — "I heard your medicines highly praised, and a year ago I began taking them for falling of womb and ovarian trouble.

"My left side pained me all the time and just before my periods which were irregular and painful it would be worse. To sit down caused me pain and suffering and I would be so nervous sometimes that I could not bear to see any one or hear any one speak. Little specks would float before my eyes and I was always constipated.

"I cannot say too much for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills, for there are no medicines like them. I have taken them and I recommend them to all women. You may publish this testimonial." — Mrs. Stephen J. Martin, Chesterville, Ontario, Canada.

Barn Burned

A lantern carried into the haymow by Mr Cushman Smith, of North Bruce, was the cause of a fire that destroyed his barn on Tuesday evening. The season's crop and almost everything in the barn was destroyed. There is insurance to the extent of $1700. The reflection of the blaze was very plainly seen from Paisley.

Nurse Fletcher Going East

Paisley Old Boys Enlist

Pte. Norman Reed, of the 90th Batt., Winnipeg, is another Paisley boy prepared to fight for the world's freedom. Norman is the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. H. Reed, of this town, and enlisted last month. Dr. Mike Sparrow, son of Mr. Wm. Sparrow, is now in France, on the veterinary corps caring for the army horses. He was in British Columbia when he offered his services. Mr. and Mrs. Colin McGillivray, of 12th Bruce, received a letter on Saturday from their son Alex who is now in England with the Canadian overseas corps. Alex enlisted last spring, rented his farm in Saskatchewan, and went to Camp Sewell with the Canadian Mounted Rifles for training. He was among the number drafted for re-inforcements and may soon be on duty at the front. Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Switzer, of Saugeen, have received word that their sons Milfred W. and George E. have answered their country's call. The former has joined the Cameron Highlanders and is attached with the signalling corps in Sewell Camp, Brandon, Man., while the latter is with the Royal Canadian Dragoons in Stanley Barracks, Toronto. Vic Smeaton, of Abbotsford, Que., is the latest recruit reported from among ex-Paisley boys. He has enrolled with the University corps at Montreal. Vic was attending Paisley Continuation School when the family left here a little over a year ago and went to Quebec province. This is at least one more to help up the low average of French Canada's recruiting strength.

CHAPTER XV.—(Contd).

Meanwhile, Mark Sutherland was in his own room reading a letter that had arrived by the morning's mail. It was from his old college friend, Lauderdale. It was a very long letter, being the first he had written to Mark for two years. He began by reproaching Mark for leaving him in ignorance of his whereabouts. He next informed his friend that he owed his knowledge of his present residence to information given him by a fair lady with whom he had been so fortunate as to maintain correspondence; that he expected soon to arrive at Ashley Hall on a visit to this fair friend, from whom he had received an invitation. He read on. The letter proceeded to tell him how he had settled in a Western country town; how, after some difficulty, he had been admitted to the bar and how he had already got into a tolerably lucrative practice. Finally came the most startling news of all—viz., that two months previous, he—L. Lauderdale, Esq., had come into the possession of an estate of sixty thousand dollars by the demise of his godfather, a widower without children or near relatives, and who, dying, bequeathed to him the whole of his considerable property. "I do not fully realise this event, dear Mark; I cannot realize my personal interest in it. All I do feel —but that is everything—is that now I may go to Ashley Hall and lay myself and my fortune at the feet of my fair friend, Mrs. Vivian."

Mark took a long, deep breath.

"What do you want, sir?" [illegible] looking up, and for the first time seeing Colonel Ashley's servant standing in the room.

He resumed his letter. There was little more to be read, but that little was full of fate.

"It matters not, dear Mark, what quarter of the country I live in. That shall be decided by the will of my fair queen, Valeria. This base sheep and this village must be given up. My evacuation will leave a fair opening for any enterprising young gentleman who may choose to fill it. What say you? If you are disposed to step into my shoes, you will find them not much worn. Think this over, so as to be able to give an answer by the time I see you."

Full of thought, Mark Sutherland folded up his letter and went to the study of Colonel Ashley.

The old gentleman received him with a kindness almost paternal. He arose and took his hand and requested him to be seated. After some hesitation, he said:

"I was not, until this morning, aware of the relations which you once sustained toward your cousin. You were once engaged to be married to Miss Sutherland, I hear?"

"Yes, sir," replied the young man, seating himself in a calm manner; while the old gentleman scrutinized the expression of his countenance, without finding anything there to displease him.

"Will you object to informing me of the cause of the disruption of that engagement?"

"We differed upon the subject of slavery. She took sides with her friends, and—we parted."

"You mean, my honored young friend, that when called to do so, you made an unprecedented sacrifice of fortune, family, affection and love for the sake of principle. Was it not so?"

Mark Sutherland bowed.

"My dear young friend, we differ in opinion; but I highly respect you," said the old gentleman, warmly, as he held out his hand to Mark, who grasped it.

"Mr. Sutherland, I pray you to consider me as your friend, ready always to serve you with counsel or assistance of any kind. I have fancied that since the unexpected rencounter of last evening, you might have something to propose. I entreat you now to waive all considerations save those of truth and speak freely to me."

"I had something to say to you, Colonel Ashley. The approach of the subject was, as you rightly inferred, extremely difficult to me. I thank you for having opened the way. You have doubtless surmised the nature of the communication I had to make to you. It is, that I love your niece, Miss Vivian, and have her permission to subtract your sanction of our engagement."

Colonel Ashley sprang from his chair and stood gazing with astonishment upon the young man—with simple astonishment, unmixed with regret or resentment.

"How long has this gone on, sir, without my knowledge?"

"I fancied it was not without your knowledge, from your own words, that you expected the communication I have just made," said Mark, with a surprise almost equal to his own.

"No, sir, not my words referred to a totally different matter. So you have addressed Miss Vivian?"

Mark bowed.

"And won her consent to be yours?"

Another bow of assent.

"Humph! well. Fray, Mr. Sutherland, have you ever tried to instill into the minds of my sons any of your own opinions in respect to slavery?"

"I have never named the subject to them, sir. I have endeavored to cultivate in them principles of truth, justice and mercy."

"Humph! Have you ever convened my colored people and preached insurrection to them?"

"Sir!" exclaimed Mark, with the indignant blood purpling his forehead.

"Nay, nay! don't look so. If you had I should have sought no vengeance, young man."

"Colonel Ashley, I am neither mad nor unprincipled, however I may have been misrepresented."

"I believe it, Mark! I quite believe it. I will not examine you upon the fourth charge! Heaven knows what demonstrations of indignation would meet my question should I ask you if, poet-wise, you had endeavored to awaken in Mrs. Ashley's memory any sentimental reminiscences of the past?"

Mark smiled.

"Yet, nevertheless, it was upon that I wished to speak to you. Mr. and Mrs. Ashley will make this house their permanent home. My son's wife will be the mistress of the establishment. Will it be pleasant for you to meet them in daily, hourly intercourse? I have seen it written that 'friendship sometimes turns to love, but love to friendship, never.' I do not think it possible for you and your cousin ever to be friends."

Mark was silent.

"You do not speak. Do you imagine that you two could live comfortably under the same roof?"

"Colonel Ashley, I know we could not."

"That will do; we understand each other. And I leave all the rest to yourself. I will speak with you again to-morrow. In the meantime, do me the favor to let Miss Vivian know that I wish to see her."

CHAPTER XVI.

"Come here, Rosalie, I want to have a very serious talk with you" said Colonel Ashley. "Now, my dear, I am sorry for something that I have just heard. Nay, now be calm; I am not going to scold. If I indulge in any sort of reproach, it must be in self-reproach. And so, my child, you are engaged to be married!"

Rosalie's face crimsoned, and her eyes fell to the ground.

"And what good, Rosalie, do you think will ever come of this imprudent step?"

The blush deepened, but she did not reply.

"And what am I to think of this penniless man, who uses his position in my family to win the affections of my niece—an heiress? Would it not be a fair and rational conclusion to set him down as an unprincipled fortune-hunter?"

Rosalie started. Her eyes flashed, her lips quivered.

"Uncle, you do not believe that—you do not!"

"Would it not be fair to believe it?"

"Uncle, you are a noble-hearted being! He just to Mr. Sutherland—nay, be just to yourself!"

"Oh, sir, they could not, knowing that Mr. Sutherland renounced a large fortune for an idea of duty!"

"At any rate, Rosalie, Mark Sutherland, being quite penniless, and well knowing that he has no way on earth of supporting a wife, makes the best use of his opportunities to woo and win an heiress!"

Rosalie dropped her face into her hands; her bosom heaved convulsively, and then lifting a countenance blushing and tearful, yet gently resolute, she said, in a faltering voice:

"I must make a confession. I must clear Mr. Sutherland, and take the blame where it truly belongs. Uncle, it was my fault!"

She paused. She averted her face, and with deeply flushed cheek and low, tremulous voice, resumed:

"I loved him, uncle. It was impossible, adoring moral heroism as I did, not to love him. God and angels know it, and you must know it, too——"

Again she paused for an answer, but Colonel Ashley did not reply, and she asked:

"Uncle! you exonerate Mr. Sutherland now, do you not?"

"Yes!" exclaimed Colonel Ashley. "I exonerated him at first; I only wanted to see, Rosalie, whether you would have the honor and generosity to admit what you have. Good heaven! It seems to me fully one-half the love originates with the girls, although they have too much tact to let us know it! Now, there was your aunt; I was two years courting her. In truth, I thought I had a terrible time to win her heart; but listen, now. Some time after we had been married, she told me how many months she had been plotting her end at me before I ever thought of her; and yet, you see, after she had once gained her point and brought me to her feet, she kept me on the tenter-hooks of suspense for two years!"

"May I go now, uncle?"

"No, my dear, I have not begun with you yet! Don't you know it was a very unmaidenly thing of you to 'set your cap' at Mr. Sutherland?"

"Uncle, Mr. Sutherland evidently does not pronounce such a judgment, and therefore it is not so."

"No, poor fellow! because he doesn't know you did it. Rosalie, how do you expect to get along if you and Mark are married? Your guardian would see you both in the bottomless pit before he'd advance a cent of your fortune. Come, stop blushing, and answer me, my dear."

"I do not know, uncle; I wish to leave it all to Mr. Sutherland. I have so much confidence in his judgment. He will never draw me into any evil or suffering."

"Always faith in Mark! Suppose he should be going away in a few days, and suppose he should wish to marry and take you with him?"

"In that case, I should wish to go, dear uncle. Have you done with me now, sir?" asked Rosalie.

"Yes, you may go!" answered the old gentleman.

In the lower hall she saw Mark Sutherland. He came to meet her, drew her arm within his own, and then they both walked into the garden.

"Well, dear Rosalie, do you know that I shall probably leave here in the course of a week?"

"My uncle has hinted it to me. Where do you go?"

"Back to the village of S——, to take possession of an establishes office about to be vacated by my friend Lauderdale, who is coming on here, upon an errand of which you are already apprised, my dear Rosalie."

"Yes, I know mamma and Mr. Lauderdale will be united next month."

"Well, dear Rosalie?"

"Well?"

"I am going away in a week—must we then part?"

"Not unless you wish to go and leave me behind."

"Wish to leave you behind! In leaving you I should turn my back upon my guiding star."

"Then I may accompany you, Mark."

"Your friends—will they not raise opposition?"

"No! I have neither father nor mother. My young step-mother, with her own heart under the gentle influence of happiness, will not be disposed to wring mine. As for uncle, his son has brought a wife home now, who will be the mistress of his house. Indeed, I might even be considered in the way."

"Stay—do not leave me just yet. My dearest Rosalie, when I go forth you will accompany me?"

"I have said if you wish it I will accompany you."

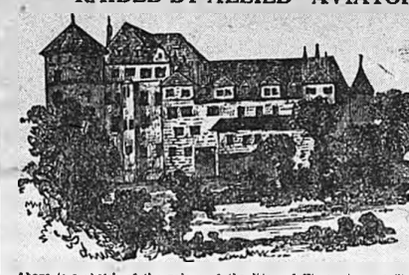
"God bless you, dearest Rose! But, my fairy, fragile girl, do you know what women in the far West have to encounter?—hardships from which the strong and beautiful India shrank, and will my pale, frail Rosalie dare them?"

"India, with her glorious physique, is still a delicate daughter of the sun; she is like a gorgeous, brilliant exotic, that can bloom only in a luxurious conservatory; while I, with my wan face and fragile form, am yet a child of the wind."

"Heaven grant it may be as you say, dear Rosalie! It is impossible for me to give you up, to leave you. What were you murmuring?"

"Only that I should not suffer half as much in meeting anything with you as I should—as I should—in being left behind," said Rosalie, dropping her head upon his shoulder, as he caught her to his heart, and exclaimed, in a sudden burst of emotion:

"You shall not be left behind, my darling! I will never, never part from you!"



For a moment her head had rested on his breast in peace, and then she began to grow restless and twisted herself out of his embrace.

"Where now?" he asked, rather impatiently.

"It is a mortifying necessity to confess, but the truth is, the ham has to be taken out of soak and put on to boil for dinner; also there are gooseberry tarts and lemon custard to be prepared for the dessert, and I have got to go and do it. I wonder if uncle and cousin St. Gerald, who both love their pastries (low be it spoken), will ever get anything fit to eat when the gorgeous Mrs. India takes my place!"

OUTWITTED JACK FROST.

How Japanese Kept Soldiers Warm in Winter Campaign.

Many of the ingenious methods used by the Japanese to keep from freezing to death during their winter campaign in Manchuria have been adopted by Russia, Germany and Austria to protect their soldiers.

In the Japanese army every man had an extra pair of boots, mittens, and foot cloths, to change at night. They were made to eat often, and to keep awake those inclined to drop to sleep on the march or in changing guards. They were kept from doing exercise that would make them sweat, and they were not allowed to lie down on snow. When straw was not available, they had to shovel the snow away so as to lie on the ground.

The clothes and shoes were made larger for winter than for summer wear, to allow for layers of air. The buttonholes and other openings were protected with special care, after small frozen areas had been found on the cheeks of some of the soldiers corresponding to the buttonholes.

The fingers and feet were rubbed with tallow or other unsalted fat, and mittens were worn over gloves. The mittens were sometimes packed with straw or feathers, and the shoes with horse bedding. Fur keeps out the wind better than woollens and a fur abdominal band proved a great help in extremely cold weather. Muffs of fur or felt and wristlets of wool or fur were found very useful. Whenever the hands were found frozen, it was learned that the men had been wearing knitted gloves.

The foot cloth worn instead of socks could be dried in emergencies by wearing it next the body. Wrapping the toes in paper, or the whole foot in a pig bladder was also found useful at times.

TRENCH DAGGERS.

Shops in London showing cutlery are doing a considerable business with army officers in trench daggers. These weapons vary in size and pattern. Sometimes they have a decided mediaeval appearance. More deadly weapons for the "in fighting" which is so frequent a feature of modern trench warfare could hardly be desired. They are described as "straight plunge dagger," "stab dagger," "knuckle-duster dagger," "trench dagger" and "Thug knife." The character of the grip varies, and the handles are weighted according to the amount of strain put on the fingers by the blow. Sometimes an officer has a fancy of his own as to the most desirable kind of trench dagger, and supplies the specification. A little excitement has been caused in a Haymarket shop by the request that an assorted lot of these knives should be sent to the War Office. The order is more likely to mean that one or two officers in the building are about to proceed to the front than that Lord Kitchener is seriously considering the issue of such weapons to the rank and file. In the French Army of course trench daggers, as well as helmets, breastplates and other revivals of ancient war paraphernalia, have been in use for some months.

In the Scottish Highlands in olden times a burning wooden cross was carried blazing to and fro among the clansmen, to rouse them to battle.

PRACTICAL FARMING

Hints for the Farmer.

Every farmer should raise bees.

Honey is an especially profitable crop for the fruit farmer.

Bees are easier to care for than chickens, and yield good returns on the investment.

Late-sown carrots, beets, etc, store much better than those which are sown early and are too old when harvested.

Cut out and burn the old raspberry canes as soon as they are through fruiting. Cultivate the young shoots and keep out all the weeds.

Alfalfa offers one of the best honey making materials. Alsike is also valuable, as is sweet clover, which may be grown to advantage in most provinces.

It will cost not less than 75 cents to raise a baby Brahma chick up to the point of laying. Leghorn chicks could be raised for about 50 cents, as they mature much earlier in life.

It pays to prepare vegetables as well as fruits neatly for market. Clean, attractive packages do not cost much more than unattractive ones and bring much better prices. Try it.

When it is necessary to prune trees, the branches should be cut or sawed off smoothly and a thick coat of paint applied to the cut surfaces, and a second coat applied after the first is dry.

The mammoth Russian sunflower is grown for its seeds. While it is blooming at the back of a lot it is a sight worth seeing. The seeds are used for chicken feed and a variety of purposes.

Molting hens need particular care and attention. The change of coat is a big drain on the bird's system, and vitality. You must make up in food An occasional feed of sunflower seed is good. Mix a little oil meal in the mash, and give increased ration of meat, green bone, beef scrap, or whatever it may be.

The colony plan of keeping poultry is best suited for the farmers and those who have plenty of land at their disposal. It makes it possible to keep several hundred hens on the ordinary farm without the expense of yarding them, and still have them away from the home buildings. It's the farmer's way.

From eight to fifteen colonies of bees are the right number for the average farmer to have, ten being usually preferable to a larger number, and still fewer being desirable to start with. For the fruit farmer bees should be regarded as a necessary side line just as chickens are in many parts of the country. The equipment cost for five colonies of bees is about $50.

It is possible for careless help to leave a considerable portion of the grain crop in the field by neglecting to gather up scatterings, loose bundles, etc, and by hauling grain on open-bottom racks. From a few pounds to a few bushels of grain may be saved every day during stacking, by using a tight-bottom rack, or a canvas over the rack that will catch all of the heads. In seasons when the grain shatters badly, a surprisingly large amount of grain can be saved in this way.

THE PATRICIANS OF AUSTRIA.

Unchangeable Point of View of The Aristocrats.

We read in Chambers's Journal that many powerful persons in Austrian society wish that the rigid rules of court etiquette could be modified; but the number in favor of reforms is not sufficiently large to bring about a change in the usage of centuries.

The nobility usually marry those of their own rank, with the result that nearly all the families of the aristocracy are related. Princess Karl, whose mother and father, together, had fifteen brothers and nine sisters, told the writer that at the last court ball there were more than a hundred of her first cousins, and that one winter at Abbazia she had not spoken during a whole week of balls and parties to anyone who was not connected either directly or remotely with her own or Prince Karl's family.

It was thought that the barriers of caste would be broken down if the Archduke Franz Ferdinand should succeed his uncle, the Emperor; for if his morganatic wife, Countess Chotek (created Duchess of Hohenberg by the Emperor), became empress, despite his solemn oath to the contrary, the present rules as to birth would hardly be enforced. If they were so relaxed as to permit a lady not of royal birth to become Empress of Austria, they would be relaxed for all those who now suffer exclusion from court for lack of princely blood. Princess Karl, although she is very broad-minded, could admit no variation of this rule. "In Austria," she said, "it is what you are born that counts, not what you become."

When I ventured to point out that this sentiment belonged to the Middle Ages, says the writer, her reply showed me the unchangeable point of view of the Austrian aristocrats. It is not mere vulgar glorying in pride of birth; it is the acceptance of a fact that to them is as necessary and as natural as the coming of night and day. "I was born Durchlauchti" (that is, Serene Highness); "I have married a Durchlaucht; my children are Durchlauchts. How can I possibly recognize Countess Chotek as empress? Durchlauchts do not make obeisance to counteses, no matter whom they may marry. Countesses cannot be made empresses in Austria."

"But they can be made queens in Hungary," I ventured, "and the archduke would be King of Hungary as well as Emperor of Austria."

"It is different in Hungary," the princess replied quickly. "The wife of the King of Hungary is his queen, even if she were a beggar girl."

"Then if the Duchess of Hohenberg had been Queen of Hungary, you would have made obeisance to her as queen?"

"Certainly," was the immediate answer.

"Then why not as empress?" I asked her.

"In Hungary the Countess Chotek would be queen. It is only in Hungary that I would make obeisance to her. In Austria she could never be anything save the Countess Chotek, because she was born Countess Chotek. One does not make obeisance to countesses, even if they marry archdukes who become emperors," she repeated.

The murder at Sarajevo made it impossible to put this question to the test, but the Princess Karl gave the point of view of the Austrian nobility in a nutshell.

A FEW RULES.

Be Conscientious in the Discharge of Every Duty.

Dishonesty seldom makes one rich and when it does riches are a curse. There is no such thing as dishonest success. The world is not going to pay you for nothing. Ninety per cent of what men call luck is only taken for hard work. Do not lean on others to do your thinking or to conquer your difficulties. Be conscientious in the discharge of every duty. Do your work thoroughly. No one can rise who slights work. Do not try to begin at the top. Begin at the bottom and you will have a chance to rise and will be surer of reaching the top some time. Be punctual. Keep your appointments. Be there a minute before time, if you have to lose your dinner to do it. Be polite. Every smile, every gentle bow is money in your pocket. Be generous. Meanness makes enemies and breeds distrust. Spend less than you earn. Do not run in debt. Watch the little leaks, and you can live on your salary.

PALE, FEEBLE GIRLS

Weakness Generally Comes on as Womanhood Approaches.

Girls upon the threshold of womanhood often drift into a decline in spite of all care and attention. How often one sees girls who have been strong and lively become suddenly weak, depressed, irritable and listless. It is the dawn of womanhood—a crisis in the life of every girl—and prompt measures should be taken to keep the blood pure and rich with the red tint of health. If the blood is not healthy at this critical stage the body is weakened and grave disorders follow. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have saved thousands of young girls from what might have been life-long invalidism or an early death. They are a blood-builder of unequaled richness, strengthening weak nerves and producing a liberal supply of red, healthy blood which every girl needs to sustain her strength. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have proved their great value over and over again to young women whose health was failing. Miss Minnie Duffield, Eramosa, Ont., says:—"It gives me great pleasure to tell you what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have done for me. When I was approaching the age of womanhood I suffered greatly from bloodlessness, or anaemia. My work was a drag to me, I had no appetite and never felt rested in the mornings. I could scarcely walk for five minutes at a time without taking a rest. I was troubled with severe headaches, and things looked gloomy indeed. I doctored for a long time and got but little, if any, benefit. I was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and did so, and after taking them for a time, felt better. I continued using the Pills until I had used six boxes, when I felt like a new person, and was again enjoying splendid health. I would strongly advise any girl who is weak or run down to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

You can get these pills from any dealer in medicines or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

FOR GRAVES OF HEROES.

No Crosses or Memorials May be Sent to Battlefront.

The British War Office announces that no crosses or memorials to mark the graves of those who have died over sea can be accepted for transit.

Durable wooden crosses, treated with creosote and legibly inscribed, are already in position on, or in preparation for, all known graves, and in addition all known graves are carefully registered. Numbers of graves are well within range of hostile shell fire, which would as effectively destroy iron as wooden crosses. The former could not rapidly be replaced, whereas the latter could be re-erected immediately approach were possible.

Further, many graves are in close proximity to the enemy and can only be approached at night; therefore the weight of the cross to be erected is an important factor.

HEALTHY CHILDREN

A child's health depends upon the state of his stomach and bowels. If they are kept regular and sweet the little one is sure to be healthy. Baby's Own Tablets are the mother's best friend in keeping her little ones well. They act as a gentle laxative; are absolutely safe and are pleasant to take. Concerning them Mrs. David Label, Ste. Perpetue, Que., writes:—"My baby was so troubled with constipation that he could not sleep day or night. I gave him Baby's Own Tablets and now he is a big healthy boy." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Ineffective Economy.

Boswell, in his classic "Life of Johnson," tells the following concerning the opinion of his friend on the subject of thrift: "I told him that at a certain gentleman's house where there was thought to be such extravagance, or bad management, he was living beyond his income, his lady had objected to the cutting of a pickled mango, and that I had taken an opportunity to ask the price of it, and found it was only two shillings, so here was a very poor saving." Johnson: "Sir, that is the blundering economy of a narrow understanding. It is stopping one hole in a sieve."

VICEROY OF INDIA.

Lord Hardinge Must Hold the Office For the Winter.

Lord Hardinge, Viceroy and Governor-General of India, whose term of office under ordinary circumstances would expire in November, will not be called home until March. The Government has requested him to remain in India throughout the winter, as the political condition of the country is far from satisfactory, due to the upheaval of the European war, which has incited some of the well-known revolutionists to renewed plotting. Lord Hardinge's life has been jeopardized several times recently, but a new Viceroy going to India at this time would encounter even greater risks.

Lord Hardinge was created Baron Hardinge of Penhurst when he was appointed to India in 1910, marking appreciation by the Government of a long diplomatic career in which he served at home in the Foreign Office as Under Secretary and as Ambassador to Russia. His career as Viceroy of India has been attended by those strange personal tragedies which often seem to come to men in their highest honors. His life was attempted several years ago by a revolutionist, and he would have been slain if Lady Hardinge had not thrown herself before him as a shield. About a year ago Lady Hardinge came to England to undergo an operation, her husband being unable, through official duties, to accompany her. She died under the operation, and was buried in the family plot of the village cemetery near their English home. A few months later the Viceroy's eldest son, Lieut. Edward Charles Hardinge, a former page to King Edward, fell upon the French battlefield, and was buried beside his mother.

Who Lord Hardinge's successor will eventually be is a question which no one ventures to answer with any degree of authority. The Viceroy of India has infinitely more power in that country and more deference from its people than the sovereign has in England, as the Oriental demands a stronger, more autocratic hand to rule over him, and his mind is more susceptible to the trappings of sovereignty.

PLAN "BOOK OF GRATITUDE."

Among the thousands of refugees who have received help and hospitality from the British Empire are many of Belgium's most distinguished authors and artists, and their gratitude is finding spontaneous expression in a volume of international interest which is now in preparation. This is entitled "A Book of Belgium's Gratitude" and is under the patronage of King Albert.

Among the important subjects to be dealt with are the neutrality of Belgium and the British guarantee, the Belgian relief fund and the organization of hospitality of this country, the help given to the Belgian army and the work of repatriation, the support given by English art to Belgian art, the English bar as compared with the Belgian bar, the tributes paid by English poets and writers to suffering Belgium, Belgian refugees in London and other cities, at the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, in the country districts and in the factories.

The book will be printed in French and English.

Off and On, Oftener Off.

The general was inspecting a regiment the colonel of which was a very bad horseman. The battalion, says The Tatler, was formed up in quarter column, and as the commanding officer gave the order, "Advance in column!" the band struck up the regimental march, with the result that the colonel's horse plunged and kicked furiously, and he was very nearly unseated.

As the leading company was nearing the saluting base, the captain glanced round to see if his men were marching well, and was horrified to see the whole of the front two ranks bunched up in the middle and every man watching eagerly the commanding officer's efforts to retain his seat.

"Ease off, there!" he shouted angrily.

"No, 'e ain't," cried a recruit, "but 'e soon will be!"

When Teacher Has the Habit.

"Best is best, and best will ever live." When a person feels this way about Postum they are glad to give testimony for the benefit of others.

A school teacher writes: "I had been a coffee drinker since my childhood, and the last few years it had injured me seriously." (Tea produces about the same effects as coffee, because they both contain the drugs, caffeine and tannin).

"One cup of coffee taken at breakfast would cause me to become so nervous that I could scarcely go through with the day's duties, and this nervousness was often accompanied by deep depression of spirits and heart palpitation.

"I am a teacher by profession, and when under the influence of coffee had to struggle against crossness when in the school room.

"When talking this over with my physician, he suggested that I try Postum, so I purchased a package and made it carefully according to the directions; found it excellent of flavour, and nourishing.

"In a short time I noticed very gratifying effects. My nervousness disappeared, I was not irritated by my pupils, life seemed full of sunshine, and my heart troubled me no longer.

"I attribute my change in health and spirits to Postum alone."

AN INGENIOUS WATER COOLER.

Butter and Other Things Kept Cool In Summer.

Pierre Lord has discovered that an ordinary flowerpot can be utilized to keep butter, water, and other things cool during the hottest of summer days.

An ordinary flowerpot will serve the purpose well, in fact any clay jar, or common unglazed earthenware pot, will answer. All that is necessary is to moisten a cloth with strong salt water and keep it over the top of the flowerpot. The ends should drop down into a soup dish or basin in which the flowerpot should stand. This draining dish must be kept full of water all the time. A dark, cool pantry is a good place in which to keep the clay pot or jar.

Another way is to wrap a layer of burlap round a porous jar. The water is placed in the jar and exposed to a current of air on a dark window sill, with the windows open and the shutters closed. The water inside the porous receptacle percolates in a microscopic moisture to the outer surface. The burlap wrapping maintains such a slow rate of evaporation that the pot is kept cold, and that cools the contents.

Victoria's Wedding Shoes.

The announcement offering for sale the wedding shoes of Queen Victoria recalls the fact that Her Majesty was a keen collector of historical relics. At a sale held in November, 1899, she commissioned a well-known dealer to secure for her a walking-stick carved to represent "Wisdom and Folly," once the property of Prince Charles Edward. The royal agent had carte blanche, and the stick was knocked down to him for £160. This was a monstrous price when we consider that shortly before the young Pretender's dirk, with flint-lock pistol attached, realized only £3 15s.; whilst the great Rob Roy's claymore, made by Andrea Ferrara, with its shark's skin grip and all, went for £37 16s. At the Stuart Exhibition organized in London some twenty years ago a number of most interesting exhibits came from Queen Victoria's collection.

Mrs. Brown—"So you have got a hen, have you, my dear. I didn't know your mother kept hens."

Little Girl—"No, she doesn't; but Mrs. White is going to lend us a hen that is going to sit, and mother thought if you'd lend us the eggs we could find the nest ourself."

Ruskin in the Kitchen.

Ruskin not only preached the gospel of efficiency, but when the exigencies of the occasion demanded he practiced it also. In her entertaining book of reminiscences, "Thirteen Years of a Busy Woman's Life," Mrs. Alec Tweedie says that her father, Doctor Harley, a well-known London physician, was a great friend of Ruskin's, and often stayed at Brantwood. One night Ruskin asked Doctor Harley whether he liked tea or coffee before he got up.

"A cup of tea," he replied.

"Why don't you choose coffee?"

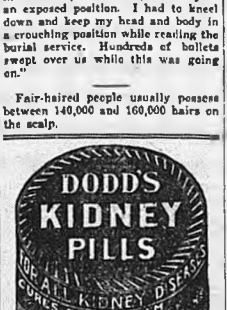
"Well, to tell the truth, I have lived so much abroad that I don't fancy English coffee; it is generally so badly made."

His host said nothing. The next morning Doctor Harley was awakened, and a strong smell of coffee permeated the room. Turning to a servant, he asked, "Is that my cup of tea?"

"No, sir, it is Mr. Ruskin's coffee."

"Mr. Ruskin's coffee! What do you mean?"

"The master was up early. He roasted the coffee himself, he ground the coffee himself, and he made the coffee himself, and he hopes you will like it."



Alcohol Gives Way to Tea.

The restriction of the sale of spirits in England has resulted in a greatly increased consumption of tea, and even though the new laws regarding the use of alcohol should be relaxed after the war a large percentage of people will have acquired a permanent taste for nature's stimulant—tea. Undoubtedly the consumption of tea is increasing throughout the world, and will continue to increase at a greater rate during the next few years, and until the supply can cope with the demand higher prices for tea must be expected.

Funeral Under Fire.

Brigadier McKenzie, of the Salvation Army, who is one of the chaplains with the Australian forces at the Dardanelles, has frequently been under fire. He conducted the burial service at the interment of Colonel Onslow Thomson's remains. "It was very gratifying to find our colonel's body," he writes. "We buried it at nine o'clock, after dark, as it lay in an exposed position. I had to kneel down and keep my head and body in a crouching position while reading the burial service. Hundreds of bullets swept over us while this was going on."

Light-Fingered.

At a dinner given by the Prime Minister of a little kingdom in Ruritania, a diplomat complained to his host that the Minister of Justice, who had been sitting on his left, had stolen his watch.

"Ah, he shouldn't have done that," said the Prime Minister, in tones of annoyance. "I will get it back for you."

Sure enough, toward the end of the evening, the watch was returned to its owner.

"And what did he say?" asked the diplomat.

"Sh-h!" cautioned the host, glancing anxiously about him. "He doesn't know that I have got it back."

LOCAL AND DISTRICT NEWS

Death of David Mink

Mr. and Mrs. J. Shaw were called to Peabody last week by the death of their son-in-law, Mr. David Mink, which occurred at that place on Sunday, Oct. 17th. The deceased had been suffering from cancer of the lip for four years, and the malady finally proved fatal. Mr. Mink was born in Sullivan Tp., and always lived in that tp. except during four years he was in Chesley. The funeral was one of the largest ever seen in Sullivan. The service was conducted in Peabody Presbyterian church. The deceased is survived by a widow (nee Miss Mary Shaw) and one child about five years of age.

From Belgian Trenches

Pte. H. L. S. Tonke, in a letter to R. G. Eckel, dated Oct. 7-h, from "Somewhere in Belgium," says: I am enjoying the best of health at present. We have had our first taste of the trenches. They are not too bad. We were in for five days and had six days just before that right behind the line about 500 yards, so we had about twelve straight days without getting a chance to have our clothes off. I had my boots off once, that was when I changed my socks. Ha! ha!! The dugouts are pretty cold. They are only about 6 feet square, and we have five in each, so some were rather crowded. We are back at the billets just now, having a good rest. How is old Paisley? Guess the burg is pretty quiet just now. I wouldn't mind being there, just the same. Do you see Major Hay very often? I wish he were along with us in the 18th. We have a fine bunch of officers, though, about the best of any battalion. Major Remmerton is in command of our company. Lieut J Bell from Chesley is with B Company, and Lieut McCrimmon from Kincardine is in E Co. You will know them all. Andy Babcock is in 16 Platoon and I am in 15. I was talking to Tommy Babcock and Sam Fleming yesterday. They are in the 1st Batt., and their frontage is just a short distance to the right of us. I can't write any more news, but if I could walk in and see you I could tell a lot more."

Interrupted Discourse

The atmosphere of Knox church auditorium seemed to become surcharged with dynamic elements on Sunday morning last, when the pastor proceeded to deliver a discourse on church union that was so strongly anti in tone as to call forth a protest from a layman supporter of the proposed union. The layman arose from his seat and objected to the minister entrenching himself behind the pulpit, upon which opposition guns could not well be trained for reply. He also objected emphatically to the one-sided presentation of the whole question that was being made to the congregation. After quite a cross fire the minister called for a show of hands as to whether he should proceed with his deliverance or not. The vote being favorable he continued, but the few spokesmen for union walked out of the church. The incident caused quite a sensation among the worshippers, the sense of some being that it was a profanation of the sanctuary. It recalled to mind that historic occasion upon which one Jennie Geddes shied a footstool at the head of prelate officiating in a Scottish pulpit. The church union question is arousing considerable feeling in some other places, too. The Herald-Times says: "An irate member of Knox Church, Walkerton, informs us that the congregation which is to vote here next Sunday and the following Sabbath on the subject of union with the Methodist and Congregational Churches have been supplied with a strong anti-union pamphlet, known as 'The Presbyterian Record' and whose sole mission seems to be the swinging of its readers against union. As 85 per cent of the great Presbyterian General Assembly which met in Kingston this summer were in favor of the union and only 16 per cent against, it seems strange that this minority pamphlet should have been distributed right in front of the vote here, while the booklet gotten out by the unionists and entitled 'Church Union—An Opportunity and Duty,' hasn't yet made its appearance. If it don't get here before Sunday this member thinks that the voters should postpone balloting until the following Sabbath, as he believes the pro side of the case should be shown before a vote on the question is taken."

S. S. Institute

The Presbyterian Sunday Schools, Young Peoples' Societies and union Sunday Schools of this district were nearly all represented by the attendance at the S.S. Institute held in Knox church on Wednesday last. Subjects on the programme were very ably introduced by the speakers, Rev. Henry Dickie, D.D., of Chatham, Rev. R. M. Gale of Pinkerton, and Rev. J. E. Hogg, B.D., of Southampton. At the evening meeting Rev. Mr. Hogg took up "Work among Older Boys and Girls," dealing particularly with the boy question, as he considered that a greater one than the girls. After elucidating the magnitude of the subject, he told how he had succeeded in conducting a boys' club in connection with his church in Southampton. "Co-operation of forces for conservation of child, viz—The Home, School, Community, Church (embracing Athletics, Amusements, Reading and Avenues of Service)" was the topic of Rev. Dr. Dickie's address, and was very lucidly dealt with. These addresses showed that the church is endeavoring to bring about by higher methods the same degree of improvement and advancement in the quality of our men and women as there is in the machinery of this age of improvement. Dr. Dickie pointed out that the main object of men should not be to make bridges but to make men. We are coming to see the supreme importance of grappling with the problem, and the time to begin is with the child. There has been more progress along these lines in the past fifteen years than in the preceding century.

Public Presentation

TO DR M C BLACK AND MRS BLACK:

It having come to our hearing that you and your household were about to sever your connection with the community, we, the citizens of Paisley, take the opportunity of expressing our regret at your departure from our midst. Your long residence would almost indicate permanency, but circumstances over which we have no control sometimes intervene and change the whole life. Responsibility drives men to toil, and brings out their best gifts. Your calling as a physician is a noble one. Your duty to the state is to render service to humanity and the community by keeping it in good health. Your record would indicate that you have been a workman that need not be ashamed. You are beginning another chapter; after change nothing is ever exactly the same again. Memories stamp themselves deep on the tissue of life. The strange looking faces one sees in the new conditions have no connection with the joys or sorrows of the past. The plant must of necessity be strong and vigorous to bear transplanting. So with men: to tear oneself from the old familiar environment and battle over again for life or death—that is the rub. Life's crowning picture belongs to those who have won no brilliant battle, or who have figured in no great drama. But who have loved great principles amidst small circles, nourished sublime hopes amid great cares, and illustrated eternal principles in trifles. A man who lets his present laurels ...sely him is fit for his burial robes. I ... e can so adapt themselves that the ... scene a farce in the community. We predict this future for you. Judging from the past. You and your estimable wife have on many public occasions given of your talent acceptably and without stint. You were always ready and willing to do your part, which, after all, is the main factor in comprising good citizenship. We feel sure, therefore, that our loss will be the gain of the place of your future sojourn.

As a small token of our esteem we present you, Dr and Mrs Black, with this cane and this umbrella, and ask you to kindly accept them in the same spirit in which they are given, and not to measure our gratitude by the totally inadequate manner in which we have tried to express it. Hoping to again at some future time welcome you to our midst, we subscribe.

The foregoing address explains the object of a gathering of citizens held in the council chamber on Monday evening, presided over by Reeve Ballachey. The address was read by Mr G L Carter and the presentation made by Mr Hugh Fletcher. Dr Black was very much overcome by his emotions, but succeeded in making a very appropriate response. Then numerous speeches were made, some short and some longer, but all expressive of appreciation of Dr Black, Mrs Black and family as citizens while they have been residents of our village, also good will and wishes for future health, happiness and prosperity in their new home. Among those who gave voice to kindly expressions were J B McArthur, Dr Houston, Geo Welsford, P Carter, J H Steele, H McKerracher, D McKenzie, J S Dewar, Geo Ballachey, W Sparrow, P Oliver, Dr Allen, F C Byrne, G B Bell, J R Laidlaw, Rev G C Little and D McArthur. The skill and success of Dr Black in his professional capacity, his public services as member of the school board or active worker on committees promoting many other community interests, his participation in sports and recreation, his sympathetic friendship and good comradeship, the ability and readiness of both himself and Mrs Black to assist on entertainment programmes, the high ideals and noble womanhood of Mrs Black, the admirable social qualities of both, were the subject of many encomiums that were not mere flattery, but becomingly due to such an outstanding couple on the eve of departure from among those with whom they had associated as fellow citizens for so many years. Miss Zeta and Master Leslie Black were also alluded to in the most kindly and appreciative terms. The meeting closed with all joining hands and singing "Auld Lang Syne." The Dr intends leaving for his new field of practice about Wednesday, if possible, going by motor car with Mrs Black and Leslie.

The Red Cross Collection

Liberal Contributions in All Municipalities

The whole-hearted and loyal response to the appeal of the British Red Cross Society for Canadian support was something that shows a very live interest in the fighting line at the front in Europe, and proves more than anything else up to this time that Canadians are awakening to a proper realization of the war situation. This section of country rose to the occasion, though there are still some who view the war as an affair that concerns other people than themselves. Very few families declined to contribute when called upon by the collectors. At nearly every house in Paisley the money had been laid out ready to be handed over without any further appeal being necessary, and giving was consistent, neither ostentatious nor penurious. The spirit of the giving was noble and ungrudging, ready and cheerful, so that the task of the fund gatherers was reduced to a very light one. We give below a statement of the contributions in Paisley and surrounding municipalities: Paisley $310.10; Saugeen $500; Port Elgin $1000; Tara $800; Chesley $1000; Southampton $1200; Walkerton $2,100; Kincardine $6000; Tiverton $800; Greenock—Polling Div. The Housewife's Corner

Tasty Dishes.

Cheese Salad.—Mix two cream cheeses with one cup walnut meat. Moisten with cream; shape into balls. Chill. Marinate two heads of lettuce and arrange in nests. Then place five balls in each nest and sprinkle with finely chopped and dried parsley. Serve French dressing with this salad.

Potato Balls.—Add to one pint hot potatoes one-eighth teaspoon celery salt, one teaspoon chopped parsley, salt, pepper and butter to taste and enough hot milk to make of consistency to shape. Form into smooth round balls, bake in hot buttered pan, or saute in butter or fry in deep fat. Or they may be sauted in sausage fat, which gives an appetizing flavor.

Stuffed Spareribs. — Match two spareribs evenly. Season with salt and pepper. Pare and slice about six sour apples. Season with sugar and cinnamon. Put prepared apples between spareribs, tie together and bake for one hour. Another way of baking spareribs: Trim neatly, rub with salt and pepper, crack ribs over so as to form a pouch, and into this put dressing as for duck or goose; skewer or tie; bake in moderate oven, basting frequently and turning, so that both sides brown evenly, and serve with brown gravy.

Sauerbraten.—Put solid piece of beef weighing, say, five pounds, in earthen jar and cover well with solution made of one cup water, nine peppercorns, mace, cloves, thyme and one bayleaf to each quart of vinegar. Turn meat every day for three or four days. Salt well on both sides after taking from liquid and saute in bacon drippings until well browned on both sides. Then add one pint boiling water and rind of one lemon and cook slowly, closely covered, for three or four hours, taking care not to let burn. Remove meat, thicken gravy with flour, adding more of liquid in which it was pickled, if gravy is not sour enough, and serve.

Crown Roast or Rack of Mutton.—Prepare the loin as for French chops and arrange like a crown, rolling the loin backward. Tie securely. Cover each chop bone with thin strip of salt pork to prevent burning. Place on rack in dripping pan with a bowl in centre of the crown to preserve its shape. Dredge with flour, sprinkle with salt and pepper, basting frequently and allowing nine minutes to the pound for roasting. Serve on hot platter with potato balls around the edge and a mound of green peas inside of the crown. Place paper frills on the chop bones and parsley around the base.

Vegetables Instead of Meat.

Salads are capable of infinite variety, so when fish and cheese fail vegetables which approach animal foods in nutrition may be served, and either the oil in the dressing or the fat in the cream or melted butter of a boiled dressing be depended upon to supply the necessary oil. Try a corn salad. A pound of this vegetable contains as much protein as is found in half a pound of lamb chops or half a dozen eggs. Cool freshly boiled corn, also some rice (dried in the oven until the grains separate), salt slightly and mix them in equal quantities; fold in some stiff mayonnaise and serve very cold in lettuce cups. Beans, peas and lentils, which are all so rich in protein, are very desirable for salads in place of meat. Cover two cups of cold baked beans with French dressing and let stand a half hour; drain, sprinkle with half a teaspoonful of onion juice, mix with cream dressing, arrange on lettuce leaves and garnish with parsley and hard-cooked eggs. Lentils combined with onions, peppers and parsley, and served on cress with French dressing, make a hearty and tasty salad.

A fruit salad has the added advantage of being very healthful, for nearly all fruits hold acids and salts in solution which are cooling to the blood, and there are so many fruits available that none needs to become tiresome. Pears, as a salad possibility once tried, will appear often this way: Peel large pears, halve them, remove the cores and drop them into cold water in which is a tablespoonful of vinegar to keep them white. Fill the core cavity with either grated cheese or cream cheese balls and serve on lettuce with French dressing. Purple egg plums may be used instead of pears, with lemon juice substituted for vinegar in the dressing. A pretty salad can be made from watermelon or cantaloupe by scooping out with a large spoon pieces from the ripest parts, draining, chilling and serving in lettuce cups with French dressing. When mayonnaise is used with fruits, leave out the mustard and pepper, put in a little sugar and use lemon instead of vinegar always. In no case should a boiled acid dressing be used with fruit salad.

Household Hints.

It is not too early to begin planning for Christmas giving.

A casserole dish is an excellent vessel in which to bake beans.

Washing soda should not be used on china, it will take off the gilt.

Do not wash colored clothes in very hot water or leave them wet very long.

There is nothing better to put in with earth for flower pots than wood ashes.

If you are fond of birds make little homes for them in your lawn and garden.

The points of economy in clothing are careful buying, mending and laundering.

Gravies served with all meats will serve in place of butter on bread and potatoes.

Buttering bread or cracker on which cheese is to be toasted improves the flavor.

Stale biscuits can be freshened if placed in a moderately hot oven for a few minutes.

Even the old chicken will roast well if it is stuffed and then parboiled before roasting.

The washing should be brought in as soon as dry, as clothes whip to pieces or rot in the sun.

The addition of a little sugar to the water in which turnips are cooked will improve the flavor.

It is a great mistake to fill the dishes on the invalid's tray too full. Also, do not crowd the tray.

Putting a coat of varnish on the linoleum yearly will make it last for years and look bright and new.

If white potatoes are inclined to turn black with cooking, try adding a few drops of vinegar to the water.

A little syrup added to the baked beans will improve their flavor. Add it when they have finished baking.

It is more economical to cook potatoes in their skins. They can be pared with much less waste after boiling than before.

Throw your orange peel into the water jug instead of into the fire, and it will perfume the water as well as soften it.

Brittle finger nails indicate a lack of oil; eat more olive oil and butter, and rub vaseline every night on the nails.

It is best to give linens a long soaking before washing. If this method is followed, stains will wash out easily.

Hard cheese is more digestible if grated. Certain people can eat cheese prepared in this way who cannot digest it in any other form.

When toasting in the front of a hot fire push the handle of your fork through a piece of cardboard, which will shield your hand from the heat.

After boiling salt beef leave two or three carrots in the liquor until cold. These will absorb the salt, and the liquor can be used for soup.

Veal ought always to be thoroughly cooked. If it is well cooked it is not a dangerous article of diet. Only when it is eaten underdone is it indigestible.

The best and only way to get finished with the many household duties is to sweep the doorstep and pavement first, and then work quietly away inside and talk to no one.

NOT QUITE SUCH A JOKE.

One Pound of Feathers Outweighs One Pound of Lead.

The old joke, "Which is heavier, a pound of lead or a pound of feathers?" is not quite such a joke as it seems at first glance.

Archimedes taught us the truth that a body immersed in a liquid or gas receives an upward push equal to the weight of the liquid or the gas it displaces. Suppose we arrange a pair of scales so that one of its arms can be introduced under the bell of an air pump, and place upon each of its arms a weight, say one pound, both weights made of the same size. They will exactly balance each other.

If we exaust the air from under the bell, producing a vacuum, we remove the upward push, and the arm of the balance that is in the vacuum descends. If, on the contrary, we compress the air under the bell we make the displaced air weigh more, and consequently the upward push is increased and this arm of the balance ascends.

It is manifest that the greater amount of air displaced the greater will be the upward push. Suppose now we balance a pound of lead on one arm and a pound of feathers on the other. They will, of course, exactly equal each other in ordinary air, for they were both weighed in ordinary air. Now, let us put the whole apparatus, including both weights, under an air pump. The pound of feathers displaces far more air than the pound of lead, and if we exhaust the air we shall find that the upward push being removed by the exhaustion of the air, the pound of feathers descends and the pound of lead ascends, proving that the seeming paradox that a pound of feathers weighs more than a pound of lead is no joke but a scientific fact.

Therefore it may scientifically be said that of two substances having the same weight and not the same volume that having the larger volume is really the heavier.

MANY PEERS LOST IN THE GREAT WAR

HOUSE OF LORDS IS A HOUSE OF MOURNING.

Many Peers With Army are Missing, and Their Fate is Unknown.

The House of Lords is described as a house of mourning. Of its 640 odd members, there are but few who have not suffered bereavement through the terrible conflict which has now been raging for more than a year. Great Britain's peerage has been hard hit by the war.

But the peers of the realm have not been content with giving their sons to the country for the defence of its flag. More than 400 of them are to-day enrolled for service to the State other than that of a legislative character. Those who are too old for duty at the front in France and on the Gallipoli peninsula find means to render themselves useful in other ways.

Long as the roster of the dead pertaining to the peerage in the present war, the list of the missing is still larger—aye, and sadder. For whereas the word "killed" means that the officer or soldier in question has had his remains reverently cared for and interred with religious rites, mostly in consecrated ground, by his comrades, the word "missing" leaves the bereaved relatives in doubt as to those dear to them have been left to linger badly wounded or have been killed.

Among the peers who have come under the head of "missing" in the present war is the fifth Earl of Erne, who until the outbreak of hostilities was a favorite equerry of King George and a lieutenant-colonel of the Royal Horse Guards. He was last seen at Wytschaete, in Belgium, on the evening of the 1st of November. He went out from the British lines to bring in some men who had apparently become separated from the main body. He did this against the advice of a fellow-officer of the name of Captain Rowlby who feared treachery. Lord Erne, 6 feet 4 in. in height, and a very striking-looking and handsome man, strode up to the soldiers who were arrayed in English uniforms. Captain Rowlby, through his glasses, saw them closing around Lord Erne, and waited in vain for his return, in the end being compelled to assume that the men had been Germans.

Other Missing Peers.

Another missing Earl is Lord Annesley, who left England on November 6 last by aeroplane, bound for the British lines in Belgium and France, and who has never been heard of since.

Still another instance of "missing" is that of Lord Willingdon's eldest son and heir, the Hon. Gerard Freeman Thomas, lieutenant of the Coldstream Guards, who has vanished without leaving either trace or clue, ever since the battle of the Aisne in France on December 14 last. His father, who is the Governor of Bombay, and his grandfather, old Lord Brassey, of whom he was a particular favorite, have spent large sums of money in endeavoring to obtain some information as to his fate, but without avail.

Lord Congleton, who lost his life in the battle of the Marne, as an officer of the Grenadier Guards, was head of the house of Parnell, to which the late Charles Stewart Parnell, the celebrated Irish Nationalist leader, belonged. Lord Congleton had made all his arrangements to accompany Sir Ernest Shackleton on his expedition to the South Pole. But on the outbreak of the war he cancelled his plans and joined his regiment for service against the Germans in France.

Another peer to give his life for his country has been Lord De Freyne, who fell at Ypres in the battle as a captain of the South Wales Borderers' Regiment, after a most romantic career.

First to Fall.

The first British peer to fall in action in the present war was young Lord Hawarden, who was not in any way connected with the Gladstone family, as might have been inferred from his title.

Gen. Lord Longford, fifth earl of his line, was killed at the head of his brigade in the operations against the Turks on the Peninsula of Gallipoli.

Few houses of the peerage have suffered more in connection with the war than that of Grenfell, which is represented by several members in the Upper House of Parliament. Thus, Lord Desborough, the famous athlete, has lost both of his older sons.

One of the saddest cases of bereavement has been that of Lord Lincolnshire, better known under his former name of Lord Carrington, now in his seventy-second year. It was not until he had been married for close upon twenty years that his hopes and prayers for a son to inherit his title and estates were finally granted. The son was a singularly attractive and winsome lad, who bore the title of Viscount Wendover. He went to the front early in the war as a 19-year-old subaltern of the Royal Horse Guards, and was killed at the battle of Mons.

The Duke of Wellington has lost his second son, Lord Richard Wellesley, captain in the Grenadier Guards, and the Duke of Devonshire, his younger brother, Lord John Cavendish, major in the First Life Guards, while the Duke of Abercorn, has lost his brother, Lord John Hamilton, captain in the Irish Guards and deputy master of the King's household. The Marquis of Northampton is in mourning for his only brother and heir, Lord Spencer Compton of the Royal Horse Guards, and old Lord Ruthven, who has two other sons at the front, is grieving over the death of his favorite boy, Captain Christian Horne Ruthven, of the Black Watch.

LADY MACKWORTH.

Conducts Father's Business Affairs During Absence in America.

Lady Mackworth, the only child and the business partner of David Alfred Thomas, the "Welsh coal king," is taking charge of her own and her father's great financial interests during Mr. Thomas's absence in the United States and Canada to buy munitions of war for Great Britain. At Cambrian Buildings in Cardiff, the offices of the Cambrian Coal Combine, which practically control the whole Welsh coal field, Lady Mackworth occupies her father's office, receives and answers all letters addressed to him, and helps to make the momentous decisions in relation to the miners which are just now affecting Great Britain's war plans.

All of the demands of the striking Welsh miners come to Lady Mackworth for consideration, and Mr. Lloyd George, in attempting conciliation with the miners, can accomplish little without Lady Mackworth's cooperation.

A year and a half ago she was a rabid suffragist, advocating the breaking of windows and getting herself arrested for setting fire to a public letter box, preferring to go to prison rather than pay the fine. With her father Lady Mackworth embarked from the United States on the last voyage of the Lusitania, having a thrilling experience in the rescue.

PARIS RENTS UNPAID.

Landlords Are Unable to Collect $134,000,000 Due Them.

The landlords of Paris in need of money, unable to collect rent pending the lifting of the moratorium as applied to rents, met recently to discuss the possibility of borrowing money with recent receipts as collateral security. The president of their association told them frankly that they must abandon all hope of making any such loans, for in the present state of the question no one would lend money on any claim for rent.

It was disclosed at this meeting that only 33 per cent. of the total amount due for rentals since July 31, 1914, had been paid, and that 670,000,000 francs ($134,000,000) remained due at the end of the quarter of April 15-July 15 this year.

Milton was blind when he wrote "Paradise Lost."

A ROYAL ENGAGEMENT.

Princess of Orleans to Wed Prince Philip of Sicily.

The first royal engagement since the war began, that of Princess Marie Louise of Orleans to Prince Philip of Bourbon-Sicily, will probably bring a very quiet wedding. Both the youthful bride and bridegroom are related to practically every royal house in Europe, and few of their relatives could, therefore, accept invitations to meet one another.

The wedding will probably take place near London, as the bride's father, the Duke of Vendome, has a country place at Wimbledon, where his family has been living since they fled from Belgium. The Duchess of Vendome is the sister of King Albert and she inherited a great estate in Brussels from her father, the Duke of Flanders, and was in the habit of spending the greater part of the year in Brussels.

The bridegroom's eldest brother, Prince Ferdinand, Duke of Calabre, is married to Princess Marie of Bavaria and lives principally upon his estate near Munich. One of his sisters is the wife of the Archduke Peter Ferdinand of Austria. A second sister is the wife of Prince John of Saxony, the King's brother. Another brother married Princess Louise, the sister of the Duke of Orleans, and ex-Queen Amelie of Portugal. He himself is an officer in the Spanish army, and makes his home in Madrid. The bride is a niece of Princess Carl of Hohenzollern, her mother being the sister of Princess Carl, and through her father she is related to the King of Bavaria and his numerous family.

MARCONI'S MODESTY.

Won the Hero of an Embarrassing Situation.

Signor Marconi, whose hatred of publicity is proverbial, has invented an apparatus that will enable anyone to see through a wall two feet thick. His extreme modesty was once the cause of his being the hero of an embarrassing incident. He was out walking in Rome one day when a friend saw him and hailed him loudly by name. Immediately he was surrounded by a curious crowd who cheered him vociferously. Marconi looked everywhere for a way of escape, but could find none. At last, to his great joy, he beheld what he thought to be an empty carriage passing slowly by, and he made a bolt for it and jumped inside. His astonishment may be imagined when he discovered that the carriage was occupied by a lady, but it was too late to withdraw, and as the lady was too frightened by the sudden advent of her strange visitor to expostulate, she allowed him to remain until they were free of the crowd. It was only when the crowd had been left far behind that she realized the identity of her unexpected companion.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON. OCTOBER 31.

Lesson V.—The Boy Joash Crowned, King, 2 Kings 11. 1-20. Golden Text: Prov. 14. 11.

I. Jehoiada, the Priest, Pledges the Soldiers to Fealty (Verses 4-8).

Verse 4. Fetched the captains over hundreds—The usual sub-division (see Deut. 1. 15; Exod. 18. 21, 25; and especially 1 Sam. 8. 12; 22. 7; 2 Sam. 18. 1).

Of the Carites and of the guard—This word is used only here and in verse 19 and in 2 Sam. 20. 23. In 2 Sam. the reading is "Cherethites." The marginal reading here is "executioners." The Carites were a particular sort of military bodyguard.

5. He commanded them—Jehoiada wanted, first, to protect the young prince's life and, secondly, to guard the palace. Athaliah would have attempted to take the life of Joash had she known he was alive; and the troops of Athaliah might attack the king's party. Hence the particularity of the priest's orders.

6. At the gate Sur—The gate of the foundation (see 2 Chron. 23. 5).

At the gate behind the guard—The guard here means the swift runners, who were kept very near the royal palace. If they were favorable to Athaliah, in this case, it was necessary to have a special company of men at hand to keep them in check.

8. He that cometh within the ranks—See 2 Chron. 23. 7.

II. Joash Is Crowned King (Verses 9-12).

9. Did according to all that Jehoiada the priest commanded—Jehoiada was "the prime mover," and so carefully had he prepared the movements that both the priestly and military guards carried the plan into successful execution without any confusion.

10. The spears and shields that had been king David's—Those David took in war from his enemies. This was the custom of using captured war implements (see 1 Sam. 21. 9; 2 Sam. 8. 7).

12. The king's son—He was so designated to indicate that he was the rightful heir.

Gave him the testimony—A part of the law of Moses (see Exod. 16. 34; 25. 16, 21). This was in token of his authority (see Deut. 17. 18, 19).

IN THE ISLE OF MAN.

The Laws There Are Quite Favorable to Females.

With a Constitutional Government of its own, and to a certain extent independent of the Imperial Parliament, the Isle of Man, to which a thousand enemy aliens are to be sent every week to be interned, holds a unique position in the United Kingdom.

The island has a code of laws entirely its own, its legislative body being styled the Court of Tynwald—for it is on Tynwald Hill, near St. John's, in the centre of the island, that new Acts are proclaimed once a year—and the House of twenty-four Keys, or representatives. A Bill is separately considered by both the House of Keys and the Court of Tynwald, which consists of the Lieutenant-Governor and Council, but it does not become law until it is promulgated in the English and Manx languages on Tynwald Hill.

Women were granted the suffrage years ago, and every female, widow or spinster, in the Isle of Man, whether she be owner, occupier, or lodger, has a vote in the House of Keys' elections. Another interesting point in regard to women is that every widow enjoys half her husband's personal estate, and has a life interest in his real estate, which she cannot be deprived of by any spiteful will. Furthermore, her written consent must be obtained to all transfers and deeds affecting her late husband's property.

Down to the middle of the sixteenth century the Isle of Man was almost exempt from taxation, and consequently was looked upon as a cheap place of residence, while its laws were available for the protection of English debtors. All this, however, has long since ceased.

It is a fact not generally known that at one time the Isle of Man was at the disposal of the kings of England, and from time to time the island was granted to various Royal favorites until 1406, when it was granted in perpetuity on the sole condition that the heirs and successors would at the King's coronation provide "a cast of falcons."

Ultimately the island came into the possession of the second Duke of Atholl, who had married a daughter of the seventh Earl of Derby, and it was from the Atholl family that the British Crown purchased it in 1829. The Government paid the Duke of Atholl $350,000 and an annuity of $10,000 for the sovereignty of the island, the Duke, however, still retaining certain manorial rights, Church patronage, etc., Ultimately the Government took over the island altogether, the amount paid having amounted in the aggregate to $2,500,000.

National Duty in War

From The Round Table.

IV.

London, Eng., Sept. 22.—This war is not merely England's war: it is the Empire's war. The Dominions are not sending troops merely to help the Motherland. They are sending them because they are no less determined than we are to overthrow Prussianism, to liberate Belgium and France, and to secure the future of the British commonwealth as a whole. We sometimes forget that the British commonwealth is one state, and that all its self-governing parts have an equal interest in its fortunes, an equal title to share in its counsels, and an equal responsibility for its welfare. Even though our own constitutional machinery is defective, we must not blind ourselves to the fact that, so far as the issues of peace and war are concerned, the Imperial Government speaks for the Dominions as much as for the British Isles. They cannot shirk that responsibility by pleading the absence of adequate representative machinery—at any rate, if they have not availed themselves of the machinery of consultation which already exists. Nor can the Dominions, if they are to act as really self-governing communities, absolve themselves of their responsibility both for the conduct of the war and for the terms of peace, by pleading that they have no means of controlling Imperial policy if they on their side do not avail themselves of the constitutional machinery which already exists. The British commonwealth is one state comprising five nations. It is at war for its life. No practical man can doubt that the governing nations of which it is composed should keep in the closest touch both over the conduct of the war and the negotiation of peace. No real co-operation is possible by letter or cable. Complete understanding can only be arrived at as the result of personal consultation by responsible men meeting together at the same time round a common table. No such consultation has yet taken place. That in itself shows how little the communities of the Empire have thrown their whole collective strength into the war. If they are ever to do so, such a conference cannot be long delayed.

Liberty and Discipline.

Having overthrown tyranny within our own borders, and extended the power of control over public policy on a wide franchise, we have grasped at the privileges of liberty and forgotten its responsibilities. The doctrine of the liberty of the individual has been preached to the point that he is often held to have the right to disobey any law of which he disapproves. The duty of the citizen to serve the whole of the great of the community has been overlaid by his loyalty to caste or class. The nature of the state—the foundation of all civilized life—is no longer understood. It has even been discredited through a shallow association with the Prussian perversion of the idea. In consequence the principle of service, of obedience to the law, which is the basis of the state, which alone can give unity, coherence and well-being to a great community, has grown weak. Hence the state itself is weak and unhealthy through lack of that selfless spirit which is its inspiration and its life.

The greatest problem of democracy is to combine liberty with self-discipline. An autocratic State gives to its people organization, efficiency and power for any ends it may have in view, but at the terrible price of undermining the sense of responsibility in the community and of converting its members into blind and obedient servants of another's will. All Europe is fighting the evils of the system, where a narrow military and aristocratic caste, inheriting the traditions of Bismarck and Frederick the Great, worshipping dominion and power, regardless of honour, ruthless of human suffering, has organized the inhabitants of two great empires as the means by which they are to seize for themselves supreme power. There can be no peace for us until the attempt of tyranny to establish its power where liberty before has reigned has failed. Democracy suffers from the opposite danger. In its distrust from autocratic power it forgets that corporate discipline and individual service are as necessary to the healthy life of every community of men as liberty itself, and that when it has overthrown the hereditary authority which imposed them it has to discipline and organize itself. This war, in one of its aspects, is a spiritual conflict between liberty and tyranny, between the principle of right and justice as the foundation of international relations and the principle that might is right, in which truth is on our side; in another it is a contest between the idea that the primary duty of the citizen is to give loyal and unselfish service to the community of which he is a part and the idea that the primary right of the individual is to ignore his duty to the community if he chooses, in which truth is with the Germans. How discipline and active service of the state is to be combined with democracy is not the purpose of this article to suggest. It is manifest that we have hardly begun to solve the problem of creating either the spirit or the machinery necessary to the full working of the principle of self-government. To destroy the power of a king and transfer it to an electorate is obviously only the first step, and the machinery created to enable an autocrat to control his subjects is obviously not that which will best enable a community to govern itself. But these are questions which must be reserved till after the war.

Meanwhile we can begin to cast the beam out of our own eye by building up the foundation on which all healthy democracy must rest—a strong sense of our responsibility as citizens and of our duty to serve the community of which we are a part. The chief difficulty in the way is not organization or even our enemy, but our reluctance to put pressure on ourselves. Once we have made up our minds to do that, the battle is half won. For in grappling thus manfully with ourselves there will be born the spirit of unity and high courage which, once alive, will not only carry us to victory in this war, but which will be the sure foundation of a better world when peace is come once more.

WITHIN AN INCH!

Hair-Breadth Escapes at Home and on the Battlefield.

This war has revived the old subject of the value of little things as life-preservers.

It was only the other week that a private in the 4th East Yorks Regiment was saved from a severe bullet wound by the cigarette-case which he carried in a pocket over his heart. The missile lodged in the inner cover of the case, and part of a cigarette was torn away.

There have also been similar cases reported during this war, notably such curious life-savers as shaving-soaps, tobacco pouches, hymn-books, newspapers, etc., all of which seems to suggest that a sort of armor plate worn under the tunic would assist to minimize the loss of life in battle. Whether that is so or not, it is not my business to explain here; but it is rather curious to note that in London and other populated towns there are annually numbers of hair-breadth escapes from death.

Not long ago an incident occurred in a provincial city which ought to dispel criticism about hatpins and their danger. A lady was passing beneath a first-floor window garden when a heavy flower-pot fell. It came down with great swiftness, and, had it struck her head, would certainly have killed her, or, at any rate, most seriously injured her. As it happened, however, the flower-pot struck the lady's hatpin, whence it bounded off on to the pavement. Of course, her hair was much disarranged, and her hat also; but she owed her life to her hatpin, nevertheless. Another extraordinary escape was of a man walking along an uneven cliff in semi-darkness. Somehow, his foot slipped, and, to his amazement, he found himself sliding down into a horrible chasm. He had been sliding for a few seconds, the while he tried unavailingly to stop himself, when suddenly he received an awful jerk, and discovered himself hooked on to a stubby little branch by his watch-chain! It was in this position that, a little later, in response to his cries for help, a rescue party found him.

In connection with the Houndsditch affair a year or so ago, at which it will be recalled, a company of soldiers were called out from the Tower of London, it was reported that a piano-tuner had a most marvellous escape from being shot. This man followed the practice of some old-fashioned doctors, who used to keep their wooden "sounders" inside their grey "toppers," and placed his tuning-key inside his bowler-hat—a little fad which also saved his life. The piano-tuner found himself in a dense crowd of people which congregated at the beginning of the affair mentioned, and in trying to get out into the side roads, came within range of the fateful window. Suddenly, a bullet whizzed towards him, and, entering his hat, lodged half-way in the key-handle.

Had the implement of this man's profession not been kept in that curious position, it may safely be assumed that the bullet would have entered his brain and killed him.—London Answers.

Anarchist a Millionaire.

A millionaire anarchist named Leon Prouvost was in Paris sentenced to a year's imprisonment and a fine of £40 for disseminating seditious statements among the troops and civilian population of France alleging that the Government was deceiving the public. Mme. Donnadieu, his accomplice, was condemned to three years' imprisonment and two male assistants were also sentenced to terms of imprisonment.

FAMOUS BUILDINGS OF YPRES NOW IN RUINS

The upper picture shows Lille Street, Ypres, with the famous Cloth Hall, which has been reduced to ruins by alternate bombardments of the Germans and the Allies. The lower view is of The Halles, Ypres, one of the most famous buildings of Flanders. The pictures were sent to a Toronto friend by Sgt. Stuart Jones, of the 48th Highlanders, with the First Contingent. Sgt. Jones, whose home is in Milton, Ont., was employed in the C. P. R. freight department in Toronto when he enlisted.

WHAT GERMANY HAS LOST.

In a Year of War—Great Sea Losses Inflicted Upon Pirates.

The total gross tonnage (approximately) of ships of all nationalities captured, detained, sunk or damaged from the outbreak of hostilities in August, 1914, until the end of August, 1916, amounted to nearly 4,000,000 tons, and numbered close on 3,000 vessels.

The details of German vessels which have been swept off the seas in all parts of the world are as under:

	Ships.	Ton.
United Kingdom and Overseas British ports	146	315,181
Captured in German Colonial ports	21	43,367
Captured and sunk by British	8	29,424
Captured by British	75	186,765
Detained in Egyptian ports	18	86,038
Detained in Belgian ports	89	136,920
Detained in French and Russian ports	95	112,945
Detained in Italian ports	36	153,876
Captured and sunk by allies	4	3,822
Captured by allies	25	37,995
Sunk or damaged by submarines, mines or explosions	4	6,976
Totals	521	1,113,258

The British trawlers sunk by submarines to the end of July number 105, of a tonnage of 15,087, in addition to 31 vessels of the same class (with a tonnage of 4,229) sunk by mines or explosions.

The record of neutral vessels sunk by German submarines is a long one, numbering 43, with a total tonnage of 59,299. They comprised:

Norwegian	22	Dutch	2
Danish	8	Portuguese	2
Swedish	8	Greek	1

No fewer than 700 writs were issued by the Prize Court up to August 25 with reference to the seizure of vessels or cargoes in purely prize cases.

The net amount standing to the credit of the Prize Fund at the present moment is £2,043,864. Nowadays there is no distribution of prize money among the captors.

AIR SOLD AS ICE CREAM.

Fifty Per Cent. of Some is Nothing More Than This.

If the man from whom you buy ice cream uses gelatin in making it, the chances are that you get only 50 per cent. of the real cream you pay for and that the rest is nothing more nor less than air.

Gelatin has no place in pure, honestly-made ice cream. In some states its use is forbidden by law. It is used by unscrupulous manufacturers because it makes poor cream look rich, and also because it inflates the products fully 100 per cent.

This practice enables him to reap a huge profit by converting one gallon of poor cream into two gallons of a product that looks just as good as the most rich, simon-pure article.

Most of the United States now have standards for ice cream to which they require manufacturers to conform. Fourteen per cent. of butter fat is what good ice cream should contain. Dishonest manufacturers cheat their customers by handing them a product thickened with gelatin, gum or rennet, which contains only from 6 to 10 per cent. of butter fat.

Few of the public and even many ice cream manufacturers fail to realize that there is such a thing as cream being too rich. Experiments show that cream containing 18 per cent. or more of butter fat is not as satisfactory as that containing 14 per cent.

If fruit is used, the amount of butter fat may be reduced to 12 per cent. without impairing the quality of the cream.

NAMES ARE DECEITFUL.

Phrases Used to Describe Articles Are Not True.

"Appearances," says the adage, "are deceitful"; but still more deceitful are names. Some of the phrases which we use in order to describe articles are, in fact, sheer lies. What are camel-hair brushes? Are they made from the hair of camels? Not a bit. They are made from the tails of Russian and Siberian squirrels. Whence comes India ink? From India? By no means. It comes from China. The French are sensible, and call it "Chinese ink." Nor does india-rubber come from our Imperial possession, but from Central and South America.

"Genuine" French brier-root pipes are not made from the roots of brier, but from the root of a white heath. Centipedes have not a hundred feet; the largest of them have no more than thirty. There is no wax in sealing-wax; heartburn has nothing to do with the heart, and there is no nitre in sweet spirits of nitre.

Finally, let us mention the depressing fact that "Dutch" clocks are very rarely Dutch, nearly all the wooden clocks so styled being made at the German village of Freilburg, in the Black Forest.

THE SENSE OF TREES.

Something Almost Human in Their Unerring Instinct.

Mr. James Rodway, who is the curator of the British Guiana Museum and an eminent botanist, declares that plants have at least three of our five senses,—feeling, taste, and smell,—and that certain tropical trees smell water from a distance, and will move straight toward it. But trees not in the tropics can do as well. A resident of an old Scotch mansion, says a writer in the Scotsman, found the waste pipe from the house repeatedly choked. Lifting the slabs in the basement paving, he discovered that the pipe was completely encircled by poplar roots. They belonged to a tree that grew some thirty years away on the opposite side of the house. Thus the roots had moved steadily toward the house, and had penetrated below the foundation and across the basement until they reached their goal, the waste pipe, a hundred and fifty feet away. Then they had pierced a cement joining, and had worked their way in long, tapering lengths inside the pipe for a considerable distance beyond the house. There seems something almost human in such unerring instinct and perseverance in surmounting obstacles.

Weavers of Cashmere shawls take two or three years to finish a pair of the very finest. These shawls fetch upwards of $600 in London.

It has been estimated that the sense of smell in a human being can detect the three-hundred-millionth part of a grain of musk.

ENGLISHWOMEN IN ECONOMY LEAGUE

GIFTS, MOTOR CARS AND ENTERTAINING BARRED.

Prominent Ladies Active in Support of Movement to Reduce Expenses.

The "silver bullets" with which England hopes to win the war, and which she must supply in a large measure to Russia, France, Italy and Serbia, are being so wantonly wasted under the old order of things in England that national economy is now the greatest immediate issue of the whole British nation.

Parliament has organized a War Saving Committee, which is issuing pamphlets to the people throughout the Empire, while in London two other societies have been formed with the same object in view, the Women's War Economy League, which has been launched by the Dowager Lady Wimborne, and half a dozen duchesses and other peeresses, and the Women's Dress Economy League.

The Parliamentary War Savings Committee is asking for a pledge toward economy in a list of expenditures which it says has been drawn up by experts before being adopted officially.

An Economy Pledge.

This pledge binds the signers, men and women, for the period of the war:

Not to build a house for personal occupancy.

Not to use motor cars unless for charity or on official business.

Not to entertain in the restaurants.

To ignore the changes of fashion.

To limit expenditure on mourning attire and on funerals.

To discharge all servants except those absolutely necessary.

To abolish all "treating," and make the nation's motto be: "No drinks till we have won."

The Women's War Economy League has sprung into life through the urgings of the Parliamentary Savings Committee, which issues its daily propaganda to the newspapers. Lady Wimborne's society is trying to get in its work in the field most fruitful for the war loan—among the 2,000,000 people who spend one-half of the total income of the whole country, as against the 43,000,000 inhabitants who spend the other half of the nation's total income.

Lady Duff Active.

She is assisted by Lady Juliet Duff, a war widow, whose husband, if he were alive, would now bear the title of Sir Robin Anderson-Smith, and who bequeathed to her and his small son an income amounting to nearly $1,000,000 a year. Her mother, Lady Ripon, is enthusiastically supporting the league, as well as the Duchess of Sutherland, the Duchess of Beaufort, the Marchioness of Tullibarine, the Countess of Pembroke, Viscountess Ridley, Lady Islington, Lady Robert Cecil and Mrs. George Keppel.

Mrs. Asquith, the wife of the Prime Minister, and Mrs. Reginald McKenna, the wife of Chancellor of the Exchequer, are also recent "joiners."

This league has only six items in its pledge, instead of the eight of the Parliamentary Committee, but the members have promised to limit themselves as to all luxuries, especially those which mean money spent on imported goods. They will have nothing to do with the new fashions, will give up their motor cars, except for urgent business or charity, will renounce entertaining in the restaurants, restrict their meals at home, discharge all men servants except those ineligible for war service.

No Evening Gowns.

Lady Juliet Duff was formerly one of the best dressed women in London. She announces that she is no longer to indulge in evening or ball costumes and will give no more large dinner parties. One or two intimate friends may be invited in to lunch or dinner to a frugal meal of two courses instead of five. Such a thing as a holiday at the seaside is not to be tolerated since it means money spent on railroad fare and tips to porters, now to be classed as luxuries.

Lady Tree supports the idea and she thinks that every woman would look well dressed in an evening gown of black satin, while for daytime wear the hat question could be easily solved if everybody wore a sailor made of velvet or silk, no hat to cost a penny more than $10.

Rings From Shells.

English girls becoming engaged to soldiers make a special point of acquiring out-of-the-common engagement rings. These have been very successfully and artistically made from the bands of shells melted down and inset with the prospective wearer's favorite stone. On the inside is inscribed the day on which the fragment was originally picked up, and a few particulars. Shell bands are also made up into brooches and bracelets. War brides have a fancy for rather wide wedding rings, and for the moment the smaller size, the popular one before last August, is in the background.

THE LATE HECTOR McFADYEN

One more of the old residents of Underwood passed away in the person of Hector McFadyen, on Thursday evening, Oct. 7th, at the hotel of Mr Hugh McLean. Mr McFadyen was born on the Isle of Tiree, Argyle, Scotland, in 1832. He came to Canada with his parents at the age of 18, settling at Fergus, living there for two years, moving to 5th con Bruce Tp with his parents, shortly after which he took up a homestead at lot 17, con 2, Bruce, clearing the farm. During the summer months he sailed the great lakes. In 1870 he became united in marriage with Miss May McLennan, 6th of Bruce, daughter of the late Dugald McLennan. His wife predeceased him about seven years. The union was blessed by a family of three sons, two of whom died in infancy. Mr Dugald McFadyen, 8th of Bruce, is the surviving son. In 1894 he disposed of his farm on con 2 moving to lot 31, con 2, residing there and conducting his farm successfully until 1908, when he retired, making his home with Mr and Mrs Hugh McLean, Underwood. Deceased was a Presbyterian in religion and a Liberal in politics. He was well known and had a large number of warm friends. The funeral took place from the Presbyterian Church, Underwood, on Saturday, Oct 8th, to Tiverton cemetery. Rev A McNab officiated at the services. The deceased was in his 83rd year.—Reporter.

The Late Mrs. Hugh McFadyen

A western paper makes the following reference to the death of a former Bruce lady, a daughter of Mr. Jos. Ferris, con. 1: This week it is our sad duty to chronicle the death of another old timer in the person of Mrs. Hugh McFadyen, who passed peacefully away at her home in the Glen Ewen district on Friday of last week, in her 45th year. The funeral, which was conducted by the Rev. Mr. Gawthorpe, was held from the family home on Sunday, Oct. 10th, interment taking place in the Oxbow cemetery. Mrs. McFadyen had been an invalid for several years, and being a victim of diabetes her death was not altogether unexpected, as the malady of late had reached an acute stage. The deceased settled north of Glen Ewen some sixteen years ago, coming from Bruce County, Ontario. In addition to her bereaved husband she leaves behind two sons and two daughters, all of whom are grown up, to whom the heartfelt sympathy of their many friends is extended in the hour of sad affliction.

WALKERTON

As 116 men have enlisted from Walkerton since the war started, the Militia are, we understand, strongly considering the advisability of wintering a company here.

Mr Con Felsing, a farmer residing east of Walkerton, found one of his largest and most valuable steers lying in a field near his bush on Sunday afternoon with a rifle ball through his head.

An aged bridegroom of 62 summers was brought to the House of Refuge at Walkerton on Thursday last from the township of Bruce, the hand of poverty having parted what the voice of the preacher had joined. A widow woman with a good farm became infatuated, it seems, with an eligible bachelor with a grey head, and for the second time had H—— lit up. The groom ... wasn't particularly noted for his ... wealth, in fact it is said his ... bank roll could have been used for a book-mark without seriously crumbling the leaves. But as the woman had lands in plenty it looked as if this little deficiency wouldn't have interrupted their connubial bliss. However, the will of the woman's former husband set forth that if his widow married again the lands that descended upon her should then revert to their son. This was the fly in the ointment of the second marriage, for the son, it seems, came over and took the farm, and not having any particular affection for his new foster father gave him his walking ticket, but like a dutiful child honored the grey hairs of the hand that rocked him, and decided to provide for her until the last solemnity should be performed and the final chapter closed. As a castaway on the matrimonial sea the aged bridegroom landed on the shores of the Refuge farm, and like a stranded sailor will here find a haven of rest.

The Ontario License Commission which met in the Court House at Walkerton on Tuesday morning last for the purpose of receiving applications for tavern licenses in Bruce for the ensuing year, handed out some hot shot to those license-holders who are clandestinely breaking the law and who imagine they look as good as Moses because they do not get into court. Strict hotelkeepers will be protected by the Board, but the violators will be as friendless there as a stray dog in a swamp. As the sin most frequently committed is the giving of liquor to men already full, those bar-keeps with glass eyes who can't distinguish between drunk and sober will be eliminated from the trade and the licenses taken from the hotel. Chairman Flavelle in his address said that the Commission were determined to enforce this feature of the law, and inspectors were everywhere being instructed to make periodical reports on the behavior of hotels in this respect, with particulars of dates, number of people in bars on their visits, number found intoxicated, with names, etc, and a few black marks incident upon such reports would be likely to be followed by suspension or cancellation of a license. Mr Flavelle further said that the man who thought so little of his license as to imperil it for the sake of a trifling sale deserved to lose his license. As to the applications for new licenses for the Royal and Station Hotels in Walkerton, the Pinkerton hotel in Greenock and Downs' hotel in Hepworth, the Commission held out very little hope to the seekers, the chairman stating that the object of the Board was restriction instead of extension, and that very strong public need would have to be shown before new licenses could be granted. In opposition to those who wanted more hotels in Walkerton, was Mr L C Benton, manager of the American Rattan Factory, who thought four licenses too many for Walkerton and wanted the number reduced to three. Mr Jas Tolton, on behalf of the Dominion Alliance, spoke also along the same lines. The Board promised to take the matter into their consideration, and the result will be made known the first of the new year, as will also the fate of the 23 old and the 4 new licenses applied for in Bruce. There was objection taken against only one of the present license holders, J Gladstone of St Alban's Hotel, Wiarton, whose license was asked to be cut off by a deputation who claimed that he was a persistent law-breaker. The Commission promised to investigate. From their attitude Tuesday it would seem that the future don't look any too bright for him. Members of the Commission who were here on Tuesday were Chairman Flavelle, Vice-chairman Dingman and Rev J A Ayearst, and as an august body of administrators they are certainly hard to beat.—Herald and Times.

Listening on the Line

The Listowel Banner thinks that a contrivance that would detect telephone patrons who listened on the line would be a great boon to the rural telephone service. There are those to whom "listening on the line" has become such a common practice that they think nothing of it, when in reality one would be quite justified in sizing such a party up as a sneak or thief. This contemptible habit of some patrons to nose into other people's business is doing much to hurt the rural phone service. Recently The Banner endeavored to secure some information from a party in the country with a phone in the house who objected because it wasn't desirable for the neighbors to know all about it. Sure enough they were listening, for the click of the receivers was quite recognizable.

Impression should be made that the phone is primarily for business purposes and not for gossip and eavesdropping. Any telephone company would be quite justified in promptly removing the phones of those who "take in" their neighbor's conversation, and it would be in the interests of the service were they to be more strict in enforcing the penalty in this regard.

TWO WOMEN SAVED FROM OPERATIONS

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—Their Own Stories Here Told.

Edmonton, Alberta, Can. —"I think it is no more than right for me to thank you for what your kind advice and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound have done for me.

"When I wrote to you some time ago I was a very sick woman suffering from female troubles. I had organic inflammation and could not stand or walk any distance. At last I was confined to my bed, and the doctor said I would have to go through an operation, but this I refused to do. A friend advised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and now, after using three bottles of it, I feel like a new woman. I most heartily recommend your medicine to all women who suffer with female troubles. I have also taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills, and think they are fine. I will never be without the medicine in the house."—Mrs. FRANK EMBLEY, 908 Columbia Avenue, Edmonton, Alberta.

The Other Case.

Beatrice, Neb.—"Just after my marriage my left side began to pain me and the pain got so severe at times that I suffered terribly with it. I visited three doctors and each one wanted to operate on me but I would not consent to an operation. I heard of the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was doing for others and I used several bottles of it with the result that I haven't been bothered with my side since then. I am in good health and I have two little girls."—Mrs. R. B. CHILD, Beatrice, Neb.

From Belgium

John McDougall, who is on the transport section with the Canadian troops, writes a short letter home, in which he says he is enjoying the best of health. Gordon Daniel is still in the same section and is keeping fine. Saw Tom Babcock and Sam Fleming the other day, but had not seen Andy Babcock or Sam Tocke for some time, as they are in the trenches. We don't be up there long enough at a time to get around to see any of the boys. We go up to the trenches every night with our teams, and it sure is exciting to hear the bullets singing over our heads and the shells bursting quite near, but none of our section have been hit yet. We are in a shack now, built of sand bags with pole roof covered with sods, so it looks just like the huts we built in the west. There are six of us in ours. Most of the others are dug-outs big enough for two. I suppose you will have a little more insight into our work since the lecture at the fair. But you can't form any opinion of it at all. It is much different to what I ever thought it was, and I can assure you it is just as dangerous as you could ever imagine. Gordon Daniel gets the Paisley paper every week. I noticed by it that Mrs. Robt. Brown is dead.

AIR SCOUTING IN A GREAT STORM

NINE HUNDRED FEET ABOVE THE EARTH.

From the Journal of An Aeroplane Observer at the Front.

I was at my favorite grocery in the little French town, buying for our mess. It was raining in sheets, and I reflected with relief that it was "perfect airmen's weather"—there could be no flying that day, surely. We had had a busy time of it, and a day off was welcome.

The question at issue was the price of honey. I was annoyed that my French had not made any impression and was repeating "Trop cher" for the fifth time when I heard the chug of a motorcycle as it pulled up outside. I had a nasty feeling the rider was after me. I wondered what on earth was "up," because the weather was impossible for flying and I wasn't down for duty.

The orderly's message was short and to the point: "A car is coming, sir, to take you immediately to headquarters."

As I strolled up the steps of headquarters who should join me but my flight commander. I knew what was up as soon as I saw him. In flying speech we were "in for it." An urgent reconnaissance had to be done, despite the weather.

We were to proceed as soon as the worst of the rain was over. The reconnaissance was so important that it was to be done on the "edge of the clouds."

By the time we got back to the aerodrome the rain had stopped and there was even bits of blue here and there. But it was only a lull. The "black ones" were getting ready for another downpour. We decided to "race them to it"—i.e., get above them before the downpour started.

As we got off, the sight of two other machines being prepared in case we did not get back or "crashed" was not too reassuring.

We were hardly in the air when the sun found us out and gave us a burst of dazzling rays. He was gone in a moment, and we knew we should not see him again for some time.

"Rain Mountains"

The air was very "bumpy." From 500 feet upward there were great current junctions which teased us about and toyed with our endeavors to maintain a consistent course.

At 800 feet the machine was in the bottom fringe of a cloud. The scene from here was like a great inverted landscape, with huge black mountain peaks turned down. We kept in the valleys and skirted the mountains. Here and there a "rain mountain" swished us with a shower, as if indignant at our familiarity.

But the valleys were closing up. Another deluge was coming. We had not too much time to get out of it. There was lightning around, and it would be suicide to stay below any longer.

As we turned a sharp corner round an unusually black and forbidding projection, we found ourselves in a splendid valley. At the top of this there was only what we call "fluffy stuff"—a mass of thinnish fog, sometimes 3000 feet through, but comparatively safe for flying.

It took two circuits to get to the top of the valley. Hardly had we been enveloped by the "fluffy stuff" when there was a huge grunt of thunder that seemed to come from all about us. Thunder in the clouds is not a sharp clap; it is a guttural roar, which sounds above the noise of the aeroplane just like a great grunt.

"Cheer-oh!" shouted the pilot through the telephone, "we've beaten the old dog to it." It is a prevalent idea among flying men that a thunder cloud has an evil genius which "lays" for one.

As I leaned forward to answer the pilot, I placed my hand on a crossing wire. There was just the faintest ripple of electric current passing through. We were not yet quite out of danger.

Climbing through a thick cloud is a tedious and anxious job. There are no "identifying objects" above, below or on either side. There is no top or bottom to anything. One is at the mercy of the instrument board.

Peering for Light

My pilot poised the machine beautifully, carefully "following his compass" as it swung to the left or right. We were not yet above the region of bumps. The cloud gave us some nasty shifts as we passed its centre. Suddenly the pilot shouted to me; "Peer for light!" "Peering for light" is the process of getting some hint as to whether or not the machine is level.

I strained my eyes in vain for a few minutes. Then right below me on the left, I saw a flash of sunlight. I was looking skywards. We were almost upside down. A bump then would have "done for" us. The controls creaked and the machine shivered as she tipped back into position. We made for the light and followed the ray. It ran at an easy angle, and we kept well on its line. The cloud began to thin. There were little pockets of light, sort of offshoots from the great penetrating ray that was guiding us upward. In another moment we were in the region of the "top fringe." The cloud now was in great semicircular ribs bending outward. It was with a sight of relief that we met the old sun again. He fairly dazzled us with his warm greeting. Behind, on the "fluffy stuff" the shadow of the aeroplane was made up of rainbow colors.

We are now 9000 feet up. There was a brisk breeze from the west. Our speed was about 110 miles an hour. It took us only a few minutes to cover our distance "out." As we tore along, the clouds below began to thin out, and as they receded lower, gave us the impression that we were climbing rapidly to a colossal height. In another moment I caught sight, through a generous hole, of a tiny, triangular patch of green, which, on the ground, is regarded as one of the great forests of the Continent. It told us where we were. It also revealed us to "Archie" (the anti-aircraft gun). That persistent old fellow sent up some "frightfulness," but he had not allowed sufficiently for the wind.

It is easy to imagine our feeling of relief at the dispersion of the storm. Otherwise we should have had to dive through the clouds and do our reconnaissance on their bottom fringe. Now, however, we went about our work in the ordinary way and were soon ready to return.

POISONOUS PLANTS.

Many Flowers Have Sap That Is Poisonous If Swallowed.

There are no beautiful poisonous flowers native to this country. There are only three plants that are really poisonous to the touch. They all belong to the Rhus family, and resemble one another in their uninteresting clusters of dull greenish-gray berries.

Two of them, poison ivy and poison sumac, are found in the eastern part of the country, and poison oak grows on the Pacific coast.

Poison ivy is a common vine that climbs over rocks, and that in some shady places covers the ground with luxuriant leaves. Occasionally, in fertile spots, it will raise branches like shrubs up over the rocky supports; elsewhere it clings to the bark of trees and climbs high.

Its flowers and berries are always in dull clusters, but its leaves may become brilliant red and brown in the autumn sun. Do not pick leaves that grow in threes on a vine, but do not be afraid to gather leaves of the woodbine, which grow in clusters of five.

It is difficult to distinguish poison sumac from other sumacs. Do not call it dogwood; it does not look like dogwood; true dogwoods have beautiful flowers, and are not poisonous. Poison sumac grows like a small, branching tree; it is the cleanest and smoothest in leaf and branch of all the sumacs. The leaflets are long and pointed, five to eleven on one petiole. If you see little drooping clusters of greenish white, or later the greenish little berries, do not touch anything on that shrub or tree.

Poison oak does not look like any oak. It has clusters of three almost round leaves, which grow on a vine like poison ivy, or more often on a low shrub. If you see the clusters of white flowers, or berries, do not touch the plant.

There are many plants with sap that is more or less poisonous if it reaches a cut or abrasion. Do not let a plant drip on a wound. There are many plants with thorns and stings that produce painful irritation if they scratch through the skin. Pick their flowers carefully.

Do not ever hold flowers in your mouth. Do not give flowers to babies, for they are sure to put them into their mouths, and some of our familiar flowers have poison enough to affect a baby's health.

There are other flowers and plants that are harmless to man, but poisonous to animals, if eaten. Many who read these lines know the bad effects of the loco weed of the West or the lambkin of the East. In pastures where buttercups abound cattle carefully graze round them, but will not eat the flowers or leaves, because of the bitter taste of the poison in them.

The botanist and lover of flowers should remember two things: first, it is safe to pick any beautiful flower; second, it is never safe to let its juices touch the lips or any flesh wound.

French Invent Odd Gun.

This strange gun is supplied with a parapet mounting which adapts itself particularly for fortress defense. The gun itself is similar to many used in aeroplane service, but its mounting in this instance fits it for use behind ramparts and intrenchments in defensive action, and even in scaling walls and breastworks of the enemy during offensive operations. The instrument has an angular mounting on a geared shaft, the lower end of which has a wheel-and-brace mounting, while the upper end is supplied with arms that hold it in place at the top of an embankment. When the pole is raised for use the gun and the platform which carries the ammunition box is drawn up to the firing position by a hand crank.

Do we deserve the good opinion of those who do think well of us?

STAR AND GARTER BECOMES HOSPITAL

PROBABLY THE MOST FAMOUS HOTEL IN ENGLAND.

Famous Old Richmond House Presented to Queen for Red Cross Use.

The Star and Garter Hotel, at Richmond on the Thames, which has just been purchased by the real estate men of Great Britain and presented to the Queen as a Red Cross Hospital for disabled officers, is probably the most famous hotel in England.

For something more than 150 years there has been a hostelry of this name on the brow of Richmond Hill, presenting the finest view of the winding river that is obtainable anywhere within a day's journey of London. The view from the windows of the Star and Garter has inspired poetry from Wordsworth to Maurice as a picture which "Bursts in a flood of glory on the view, Still bright, still varied and forever new."

An auctioneer's advertisement, printed 130 years ago, described the property as follows: "These truly desirable and valuable premises, the Star and Garter, on Richmond Hill, the favorite spot for centuries past of princes, and the admiration and resort of the first nobility and taste in Europe; replete with every requisite convenience for the reception of all ranks in the public line, possessing the most extensive and delightful views of the Thames, the whole forming one of the most enchanting pictures in Great Britain."

Entertained Royalty.

One of the notable occasions of the big hotel was a breakfast served on June 10, 1814, at which were present the Prince Regent of England, the Emperor of Russia, the Duchess of Oldenburg and the King of Prussia, with his sons and nephews. The company, which also included Generals Blucher and Platoff, had journeyed out from London by coach.

Queen Victoria was a frequent visitor to the hotel, particularly during the earlier years of her reign, and there were few of her royal contemporaries who did not at one time or another partake of its hospitality during the decade preceding the fire of 1870, which destroyed the greater part of the luxurious building.

Within two years it was rebuilt in even more magnificent fashion, and for the next few years was at the Zenith of popular favor. King Edward, while Prince of Wales, was often seen there. The cook was excellent, the wines unimpeachable and the cost heavy enough to keep away the "mob." Given a fine pair of horses, it was a delightful drive of just the right distance from Hyde Park Corner, the centre of fashionable London, on a fine summer evening. Not only were the smartest of private dinners given there, but the great City Companies held their banquets in the spacious pavilion, and statesmen and celebrities of every degree met beneath its roof.

A Site of Rare Beauty.

But with the dawning of the present century the attractions of the Star and Garter waned. It is the conventional thing to say that the coming of the automobile killed its popularity. Other causes contributed. The road, instead of running through pleasant open country, was rapidly becoming an artery of heavy omnibus and tramcar traffic. The era of the fashionable restaurant in town had begun, and it was no longer necessary to go so far afield for a good luncheon or dinner. Ten years ago the hotel closed its doors. There have since been rumors from time to time as to reopening it as a palatial boarding house or rebuilding it into a block of luxurious flats, but none of the schemes came to maturity.

In its new use as a permanent hospital for officers, it will preserve for a work of national usefulness a site of rare beauty. The hotel is almost completely surrounded by park lands, which have been gradually acquired by the London County Council to give the public easy access to the banks of the Thames.

BRAVE OLD RUDOLPH.

An Interesting Incident of the Great War.

The letter of a French soldier, a translation of which appeared in an English paper, gives us a glimpse of the brighter side of war. The writer tells how the Germans assaulted the French in their trench and were repulsed. They left many dead, and one man alive and unarmed, who, although alone and deserted, was still fighting bravely. A French soldier was about to transfix him with his bayonet when one of his comrades thrust the weapon aside, and in admiration of the German's fighting grit tackled him and took him prisoner. He was fat and bald-headed, and in answer to the question put to him said his name was Rudolph. The sound of his surname brought laughter, and his captor said:

"Ah, well, my old Rudolph, you're a brave fellow. Return to your comrades, and tell them that we know a brave soldier when we see one."

Fearing that he was to become the object of a grim joke—and perhaps to be shot in the back—he hesitated, when one of the French soldiers, pushing him forward, said:

"Go on, you'll not be harmed."

Rudolph lifted his hands above his head and returned to his trench.

Fresh French troops arrived to relieve their comrades, and they were told about Rudolph. The following day, when firing had ceased for a time, the newcomers shouted across to the German trenches to inquire whether Rudolph were still living.

"Ja! Ja!" was the response.

"Show yourself, then Rudolph!" they cried out. "We are newcomers. We have heard of your bravery, and want to see you."

Rudolph's head bobbed up above the trench wall, and, grinning, he removed his helmet, patted his bald head, bowed, and disappeared.

The French soldiers gave him three cheers, and one of them remarked admiringly, "I hope we may not kill him, for he is a brave chap, that old Rudolph!"

SQUEERS REALLY LIVED.

Charles Dickens Was in Ernest In Nicholas Nickleby.

An interesting new Dickens letter throwing light upon the characters in "Nicholas Nickleby" of Squeers and Smike was printed in The Times, London. The letter is written by Charles Dickens to Mrs. S. C. Hall. It is dated December 29, 1838.

When Dickens was in Yorkshire he actually met with the "rascalities of those Yorkshire schoolmasters" painted in his book. Standing in an old churchyard (Bowes Church) he came across the grave of a boy who had "died suddenly" at the school opposite the church. "I suppose his heart broke," adds Dickens. "I think his ghost put Smike into my head upon the spot."

A man named William Shaw was the schoolmaster who raised Dickens' ire. The inky-penknife incident described in "Nicholas Nickleby" is attributed to this man.

TARTAN KILTS IN DANGER.

Present Kilt Has Offended Lovers of Scottish National Dress.

The statement that in the future the Highland regiments in the British army are to wear a khaki, instead of the familiar tartan, has aroused the intense indignation of the Scottish people. And what is worse still, says Tit-Bits, the khaki kilt, according to the latest order, is to be composed of two yards less of material than is used at present.

The army kilt, as it is used to-day, has offended all true lovers of the Scottish national dress, for it consists of only five yards of cloth, badly pleated, whereas, according to one authority, it is impossible to make a proper kilt with less than seven or eight yards.

The pleating is a process that can only be carried out by a skilled worker. It consists in gathering in the pleats at the top, removing the surplus cloth, and so shaping the kilt to the body. Otherwise the shape is merely that of a woman's dress.

The kilt as we know it to-day is not the original dress of the Highlander, but is really a modification of the original Highland plaid, which consisted of a plain piece of tartan from four to six yards in length and two yards broad, which was folded or pleated round the waist and firmly bound with a leather belt, so that the lower side fell down below the knee joint, the upper part being fastened to the shoulder with a large brooch or pin.

This upper part was often used as a covering for the shoulders and body in wet weather. To attire himself in the pleated plaid in the old days required, on the part of the Highlander, no small amount of dexterity. The usual way was to lay it on the floor and after carefully arranging the folds, to lie down upon it and then blanket, in which the Highlander could at night envelop himself.

Ultimately the Scottish plaid—or "breacanfeile," to give it the true Scottish name—was succeeded by the kilt as we know it to-day. The plaid and the kilt were supplemented by an elaborate sporran—the original sporrans were made from the skins of wild animals—and stockings, which were usually cut out of the web of the tartan, and gartered with cloth of rich colors. The skean dhu, or small dirk, is generally fixed in the garter of the right leg.

Quite a feature of the highlander's dress was the silver buttons, tassels, embroidery, and lace. There was a peculiar reason why a Highlander decorated his costume with silver buttons in earlier times, for it was thought that, should their wearer fall in battle, the value of the buttons would provide him with a decent funeral. This idea was carried to such an extent that in the seventeenth century it is said that the officers of Mackay and Munroe's regiment, which went to Sweden to serve under Gustavus Adolphus, had rich buttons on their clothes, and that they also wore each a solid chain round the neck, so as to assure the owner, if wounded or taken prisoner, of good treatment.

The origin of the white gaiters worn by the Highland regiments is also an interesting story. They are worn in memory of some of the Irish that the regiments underwent in the Peninsular War. During the retreat of the forces under Sir John Moore at Corunna the soldiers suffered great hardships, and their boots became sadly worn, owing to the rocky nature of the ground on the Portuguese coast. The Highlanders thereupon took the shirts from their backs, tore them into strips, and bound them round their feet for protection. The white spats or gaiters were introduced as part of the regular uniform in memory of those trying times.

VARIETIES IN EXPLOSIVES.

Hundreds of Different Kinds Known to Science.

Explosives are solids which, under certain conditions, suddenly change into heated gas occupying many times the original space of the solids. Ordinary gunpowder, when fired, turns into gas, of which the volume is 4,000 times as great as that of the powder. No wonder the bullet in front of it leaves the muzzle of the rifle in a hurry.

To-day there are scores, even hundreds, of different sorts of explosives known to science. Some, such as lyddite, require a very considerable shock to explode them. Others, such as nitro-glycerine, are fearfully dangerous to handle, for a few extra degrees of warmth or a very slight jar is sufficient to turn them instantly into gas.

Of the latter type there is nothing quite so unstable as iodide of nitrogen. It has to be made in alcohol. When allowed to dry it appears as a brown powder, and so unstable is this powder that a touch with a feather will set it off. The experiment has been tried of leaving a few grains upon a table mixed with a few grains of sugar. The first bluebottle that flew on the table and began to crawl among the grains caused an explosion.

The mere jarring of the air by a loud shout or a heavy footstep is sufficient to detonate iodide of nitrogen and it need hardly be added that no one in his senses would attempt to make this terrible stuff. To do so in any quantity would be equivalent to committing suicide.

Nitro-glycerine is not so dangerous as this iodide, but at a temperature of only 100 degrees—that is, very little more than the warmth of the human body—it begins to decompose.

Tons of nitro-glycerine are turned out every day, for it is the explosive from which guncotton is made. But all the mixing vats are artificially cooled by coils of cold water pipes.

ALL MOTHERS NEED CONSTANT STRENGTH

Their Strength is Taxed and They are Victims of Weakness and Suffering.

When there is a growing family to care for and the mother falls ill it is a serious matter. Many mothers who are on the go from morning to night, whose work, apparently, is never done, try to disguise their suffering and keep up an appearance of cheerfulness before their family. Only themselves know how they are distressed by backaches and headaches, dragging down pains and nervous weakness; how their nights are often sleepless, and they arise to a new day's work tired, depressed and quite unrefreshed. Such women should know that their sufferings are usually due to lack of good nourishing blood. They should know that the one thing they need above all others to give them new health and strength is rich, red blood, and that among all medicines there is none can equal Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for their blood-making, health-restoring qualities. Every suffering woman, every woman with a home and family to care for should give these pills a fair trial, for they will keep her in health and strength and make her work easy. Mrs. G. Strasser, Acton West, Ont., says: "I am the mother of three children, and after each birth I became terribly run down; I had weak, thin blood, always felt tired, and unable to do my household work. After the birth of my third child I seemed to be worse, and was very badly run down. I was advised to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I found the greatest benefit from the Pills and soon gained my old-time strength. Indeed, after taking them I felt as well as in my girlhood, and could take pleasure in my work. I also used Baby's Own Tablets for my little ones and have found them a splendid medicine for childhood ailments."

You can get these pills through any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

INCREASE IN USE OF SHELLS.

Germans Fired 817,000 in 1870, French 100,000 in a Day.

Interesting statistics concerning munitions of war are given by a writer in the Lokal Anzeiger of Berlin in an article in which the great outcry for more munitions in England and in France is denounced as being insincere and caused chiefly by a desire to explain and excuse the failure of the Allies every time they have assumed the offensive.

The writer attempts to prove that heavy artillery has not, in spite of the prevailing opinion to the contrary, taken the place of the infinite soldier in modern warfare. He notes in support of this argument the bombardment announced by the German General Staff on March 10, when the Allies used 100,000 shells in twenty-four hours on a front of eleven kilometers. The cost of this bombardment is estimated at $1,625,000.

"In the Franco-German war," he says, "a German battery fired on an average 200 shells from each gun. In the Manchurian war the average had already risen to twice that figure. These totals are far exceeded by those of the present war. In the whole of the war of 1870-71 the German artillery fired 817,000 shells. Of these 470,000 were used in the sieges of French fortresses and 338,000 on the field. Of the latter total 10 per cent. was fired off in the battle of St. Privat alone. In the Russo-Japanese war the total was 954,000."

FEED CHILDREN

On Properly Selected Food. It Pays Big Dividends.

If parents will give just a little intelligent thought to the feeding of their children the difference in the health of the little folks will pay, many times over, for the small trouble.

A mother writes: "Our children are all so much better and stronger than they ever were before we made a change in the character of the food. We have quit using potatoes three times a day with coffee and so much meat.

"Now we give the little folks some fruit, either fresh, stewed, or canned, some Grape-Nuts with cream, occasionally some soft-boiled eggs, and some Postum for breakfast and supper. Then for dinner they have some meat and vegetables.

"It would be hard to fully describe the change in the children, they have grown so sturdy and strong, and we attribute this change to the food elements that, I understand, exist in Grape-Nuts and Postum.

"A short time ago my baby was teething and had a great deal of stomach and bowel trouble. Nothing seemed to agree with him until I tried Grape-Nuts softened and mixed with rich milk and he improved rapidly and got sturdy and well."

THE GROOMING OF FLOWERS.

Numerous Instruments Are Used By French Florists.

The instruments used by the French florists to prolong the life of cut flowers and remove imperfections are as numerous and delicate as those on a well-equipped dressing-table. They include scissors of all sizes and shapes, small cutting-pliers and pincers of many kinds, brushes, atomisers, sprays, and bottles, containing various gums. A withered leaf or even one poorly developed rushes the appearance of a rosebud, consequently the one is cut off, and the other, is possible, is reshaped. The buds are also pierced as near the base of the flowers as possible, with minute wires which keep the leaves in place. An instrument very similar to a curling-iron is used to dress a faulty leaf.

One of the means employed to prolong the life of the flower is to remove the anthers, so as to prevent the spreading of the pollen, for, if fertilization is allowed to take place, the flower has fulfilled its mission and soon fades. In flowers of the lily order the anthers are removed for still another reason. They develop such an abundance of yellow pollen that it falls and taints the leaves, thus marring the spotless white beauty of the flower. The stems of flowers that begin to hang their heads are placed in very hot water for about five minutes, and then are placed in a dark and cool place for about an hour.

ARMENIANS PERSECUTED.

Those Who Escaped Kurds Said to Succumb to Privations.

"The Turks are gradually but effectively exterminating the Armenian people," asserts the Dedeaghatch Correspondent of the London Times. "The modus operandi is to send from each Armenian village day by day as many persons as a train can carry. When they arrive at Konish, or some adjacent station, they are turned out and an escort furnished over the Taurus Mountains.

"Once on the other side, they are supplied with enough food for a few days and told to continue their journey to the neighborhood of Mosul, as they will now be in perfect safety. The region is nothing but a desert, and before many hours marauding bands of Kurds or Bedouins rob and pillage these helpless men, women and children, so that those who are not actually slain die of hunger or thirst. Not one ever reaches the intended destination, for should any one try to escape in another direction, Turkish shepherds have orders to shoot them at sight.

"Many distracted mothers throw their children into the Euphrates rather than see them suffer. Some even sell them for what they will bring before starting on their journey.

"A widely known American missionary who arrived at Constantinople the first week in September, declared he saw as many as 15,000 Armenians collected around one station waiting to be sent on this journey from which none would ever return.

"Chakik-Arlasar, which resisted disarmament and deportation, is reported to have been bombarded, with the result that the entire population, including the bishop, was killed."

FEATS OF AIR MECHANICS.

The Work Requires Steady Nerves, for It Entails Great Risks.

The tragic death of a naval air mechanic at Hoo aerodrome, in England, recently, who, after being lifted to a height of 700 feet by a trailer rope of an airship, lost his grip and fell to the ground, calls attention to the dangerous work daily carried out by the men behind the air services. The safety of the aeroplanes and airships used by the Royal Flying Corps and the Naval Air Service are dependent upon the conscientious work of the mechanics. Pilots themselves have not the time to personally examine every strut wire or bolt on their machines before taking them over the enemy's lines, and this important task is left to the "A. M.'s," as they are termed. The work of the air mechanic requires steady nerves, for it entails daily risks.

When airships start on voyages the mechanics, by means of numerous trailer ropes, hold the swaying vessel to earth until the signal is given to let go. In a wind a lighter-than-air machine is a difficult monster to manage. It plunges and rears in the air with the unexpectedness of a broncho, and the mechanics are continually being lifted off their feet as the airship wrenches at the trailer ropes. Woe betide the unfortunate mechanic who becomes entangled in a rope as the airship rises in the air. He is likely to be lifted to a height of several hundred feet, and to save his neck he must cling to the rope for ten or fifteen minutes while the airship is maneuvered back to earth.

Starting up the powerful aeroplane engines used in military machines is an important task of the air mechanic. He has to swing the 8-foot propeller in the front or rear of an aeroplane and jump to safety before it gets into its stride. The slightest slip would mean disaster, for the large blades of an aeroplane propeller turn at a speed of over a thousand revolutions a minute and they will cut through any obstruction with the ease that a razor severs a bar of soap.

In the large type of military or naval aeroplanes, which weigh over a ton, air mechanics often have to ascend with the pilot to tend the engine. If the latter proves refractory a descent is made and the "A. M." has to get to work with his tools, often within range of the enemy's guns. The air mechanic, as many may imagine, does not keep out of danger well in the rear of the firing line. There are times when they have to make venturesome dashes on a motor repair lorry to assist an aviator who has landed close to the enemy's lines. If the aeroplane on such occasions is beyond repair, the mechanics have to pull it to pieces and pack it on a lorry, dodging as best they can the shells directed at them from hostile artillery.

Most naval air mechanics are accomplished swimmers, and possess a constitution of iron. When the navy's great seaplanes are launched the mechanics generally have to undo up to their necks into the water to manoeuvre the machine from the shore. To plunge into icy-cold water in the half light of dawn is not a pleasant task, yet it is one which the sailor mechanics have to carry out almost daily.

In rough seas the waves break over their heads, and the seaplane they are manoeuvering is tossed about like a cork. Yet in true naval spirit the mechanics of the Naval Air Service carry out their hazardous duties cheerfully, happy in the knowledge that they are doing their bit toward crushing out the might of the Germans.

Artillery Expert Dies.

The death is announced of Lieutenant Colonel Locarde, a distinguished French artillery expert. His death is said to have been due to overwork. During the present war he introduced several new forms of high explosive projectiles for close trench fighting. His is also the credit for the invention of the hydro-pneumatic brake, which is the most novel and important feature of the famous French 75-mm. gun.

YOUNGSTERS PLAY AT WAR.

Children of France in Trenches at Trouville.

The horse races and other social attraction, which bring the elite of society to Trouville, France, at this season every year, are lacking this year, but the famous resort is still lively with a throng that is made up largely of convalescent soldiers and their nurses. Some of the biggest hotels are hospitals, some of the elegant villas also, but there are enough children to prevent the beach from being submerged in gloom.

The sands of Trouville are also the scene of interesting military operations. All along the beach, from Deauville to Trouville, there is an almost uninterrupted series of trenches built by the contingents of 1930 to 1935, now in their fifth to tenth year, who are working under the direction of convalescent soldiers. Bathers are obliged to give the counterslign in order to pass, and, then, they are distinctly informed, it is at their own risk and peril, for their are labyrinths everywhere in imitation of those at the front. If a high west wind fills the trenches with sea water, recalling the winter campaign along the Yser, it heightens the joy of the 5 to 10-year-old "poilus," who jump into them in their bathing suits and make more noise than ever.

CHILDHOOD CONSTIPATION

Baby's Own Tablets will promptly cure constipation of childhood. They act as a gentle laxative, regulate the bowels and stomach and are absolutely safe. Concerning them Mrs. A. Crowell, Sandy Cove, N.S., writes: "I can strongly recommend Baby's Own Tablets to all mothers whose little ones are suffering from constipation." The tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

SURGEON READY FOR AIR RAID.

Operated With Lamp When Bomb Wrecked Electric Plant.

Air raids are becoming so frequent that inhabitants of small towns on the east coast of England are getting used to them. The London Lancet tells the following story of an operation performed during one of the German raids:

"During one of the recent air raids on the east coast a well-known surgeon was performing an operation of tracheotomy at a nursing home when the German aircraft came over the place at night. The town electric current was at once cut off. All the lights went out suddenly, and this too at the very moment when the surgeon in question was opening the windpipe. Fortunately it was not the first attack delivered against this place, a fishing and sea bathing resort.

"Taught by experience, the operator had made it a matter of habit to warn his nurses and other assistants that lamps should be kept ready for use during all operations which had to be undertaken at night. This precaution may have saved the small patient's life. With but a trifling delay the tracheotomy was completed and the child is now doing well.

"To have performed an delicate an operation in such circumstances is a considerable feat, for the raid was a serious one, a good many bombs were dropped, several persons were killed and injured and the feeling at the moment was naturally one of intense apprehension. Some of the bombs hit a house in the neighborhood, the residence of another well-known practitioner. Luckily no one was at home at the time and the medical practitioner got off with the destruction of a certain amount of property. The experience recorded will no doubt insure the taking by medical men generally of the precautions which in this case had been fortunately observed."

O'Leary Is a Joker, Too.

There is a new story in circulation about Michael O'Leary, the Irish V.C. During his visit to London a compatriot greeted him enthusiastically and begged a single button from his coat. O'Leary, without a smile, answered: "I'll do better than that. A single button is too little for you. Just go across the street there and tell the man inside that I sent you and he will give you an entire set." The place was a recruiting office.

WAR HITS GLASGOW "PUBS."

Lessening of Hours, Decrease in Drunkenness.

In Glasgow public houses are now permitted to sell liquor five and a half hours a day only. The places are closed in the morning, when drinking would unfit a workman for the entire day. Treating and then credit system are done away with, and the practice of carrying drink away in bottles is also forbidden.

Although these new restrictions have been in force but a short time, they have already resulted in a considerable decrease in the arrests for drunkenness. During the week preceding the curtailment of the hours when the houses were open all day, 225 men arrested for drunkenness and 88 women. In the first week that the restrictions were enforced the number of men arrested for drunkenness was 210 and the number of women who were haled before the police courts for the same cause was 84.

TO PROTECT TROOPS.

French Army to Have 200 Travelling Laboratories.

Two hundred travelling toxicological laboratories have been formed by the French army authorities and will shortly leave for the front.

Their main utility will be to insure the health of the soldiers fighting in the trenches or resting in the cantonments. The chemists attached to each laboratory will analyze the water the soldiers drink and the foodstuffs brought to them so as to insure their perfect purity. They will also control the disinfection of the front line trenches whenever that is possible.

A secondary phase of their activities, front which, however, much is expected, will be the analysis of new German methods of attacking by gas bombs, liquid fire or gas clouds.

Each laboratory has attached to it either a skilled doctor or an expert analytical chemist with trained laboratory assistants.

Reassuring Mother.

Edmund had just begun to attend the public school, and had found a new friend, a child of whom Edmund's mother had never heard.

"Who is this Walter?" she asked. "Is he a nice little boy?"

"Yes, ma'am, he is!" replied Edmund enthusiastically.

"Does he say any naughty words?" pursued his mother.

"No," replied Edmund, with emphasis, "and I'm not going to teach him any!"

Better World After the War

We are confident that the new world which will be born out of these troublous times, whose character will be sealed with the blood of all nations, whose freedom will be purchased with the lives and livings of human beings, will more nearly approach the ideal condition "wherein dwelleth righteousness" than at any previous period in history.—St. Thomas Journal.

Name and Number on Whiskey Bottles

The military heads don't approve of soldiers indulging in liquor, and to make it easier to detect where drunks procure their booze it is suggested by Col. Logie that the liquor dealer's name be stamped on every bottle. The manufacturer's label adorns every bottle produced in the distilleries. THE ADVOCATE would suggest that not only the dealer's name appear on the bottle, but also that all bottles be numbered consecutively, and that makers and dealers be required to keep a record showing where each number goes to when sold. This would afford a chain of evidence very much needed in shutting off indiscriminate and illicit selling by the bottle.

Millionaire Bighead

Henry Ford, with the millions he has made out of automobile manufacturing in a few years, has apparently developed "swelled head" or "exaggerated ego"—the complaint with which the Kaiser and several emperors of olden times were sadly afflicted, although Henry may mean better than Kaiser William or Napoleon. No individual should be vested with the ruling powers of the German Emperor nor no group of men have the authority of the Prussian military autocrats. Neither should any one man or group of men have the power to make millions of money for themselves out of the people. The democratic system of government which is displacing monarchy and autocracy should be paralleled by a system which will ensure a more equitable distribution of the wealth produced by the labor of the people. The money that is made out of the people should be for the people instead of being accumulated as fortunes for the few.

How to Get on in the World

Most of our successful men began life without a dollar." They have won success by hard work and strict honesty. You do the same. Here are rules for getting on in the world:—

1. Be honest. Dishonesty seldom makes one rich, and when it does riches are a curse. There is no such thing as dishonest success.

2. Work. The world is not going to pay for nothing. Ninety per cent of what men call genius is only a talent for hard work.

3. Enter into that business or trade you like best, and for which nature seems to have fitted you, provided it is honorable.

4. Be independent. Do not lean on others to do your thinking or to conquer difficulties.

5. Be conscientious in the discharge of every duty. Do your work thoroughly. No one can rise who slights his work.

6. Don't try to begin on top. Begin at the bottom and you will be surer of reaching the top, some time.

THE NEED IS URGENT

The urgent need for citizens to be more generous than ever this year in donating money to the Patriotic Fund is shown in a report which recently appeared in the Canadian Patriotic Fund Bulletin. It shows the work that has been done during the last year and the work that remains to be done. The article says:—

"With 140,000 men called to the colors, and further drafts in contemplation, the enormity of the task of caring for the vast army of those dependent upon them is daily becoming more apparent. What was ample provision for the first year of the war must needs be doubled during the second period. In the course of the year ending August 31st, 1915, there was raised by the combined branches of the Fund $4,900,178.61; there was disbursed $2,786,999.03, leaving a balance on hand on September 1st of $2,113,179.58, for future needs. As the amount requisitioned for August reached $380,985.82 and for September exceeded $400,000, it will be seen that the balance on hand, were peace to be declared tomorrow, would not be more than sufficient to care for the soldiers' dependents during the four or five months' period that will be required for the Canadian troops to be disbanded and the soldiers reinstated in civil life. Probably by Christmas, if not sooner, the monthly drain on the united Fund will reach $500,000, at which rate of expenditure it will require $6,000,000 to carry on the work for the ensuing twelve months.

The western provinces have undertaken to raise $2,250,000, while it is estimated that they will require in addition to monies on hand the sum of $2,850,000, leaving a deficit of about $600,000 to be made up through the central organization. Considering the fact that only about one-fourth of our total population lies west of the Great Lakes, while more than two-fifths of the families requiring assistance are in the western provinces, this demand upon the Canadian Fund is by no means unreasonable. Hence, of the $6,000,000 required for the coming year it is expected that $3,350,000 (or about $600,000 more than local requirements) will be raised in eastern Canada. The three maritime provinces expect to need $500,000 which they have locally undertaken to secure, but their executives are of opinion that this part of Canada will have no surplus for outside assistance. It will be then to Ontario and Quebec that we shall have to look not only for what monies will be required for the soldiers' dependents within those provinces, but also for an additional $600,000. If the response of the first year be any criterion we shall not seek even this large sum in vain. A general and generous contribution will, however, be necessary, and the head office of the Fund will endeavor during the fall and winter to stimulate every community within reach of the Capital to put forth a maximum effort to reach the desired end. We shall require, and will doubtless receive, the heartiest co-operation of every member of the National Executive, each in the province from which he comes.

LOCAL AND DISTRICT NEWS

$10.00 for Each Paisleyite Enlisting

Paisley citizens are desirous of showing some degree of appreciation of the sacrifice being made by citizens of our town who go off to the fighting lines, but heretofore there has been no systematic way of doing so. A paper was therefore circulated on Monday afternoon by means of which the feeling of the town was ascertained as to a grant being made to each departing soldier by the council. The expression was so decidedly in favor of this plan that the council, at a special meeting held on Tuesday afternoon, unanimously voted to donate $10 to each resident citizen who enlists for overseas service. Instructions were given to have cheques issued for D J Bain, L R Pulman, E Pearce and Rod McLennan.

Died at Pipestone, Man.

Mrs T Kelly and family, of the townline of Saugeen and Bruce, are bereaved by the death of Mrs McLachlan, the eldest daughter, at Pipestone, Man. Mr and Mrs McLachlan went to the west twelve years ago, after having lived the first six years of their married life at Burgoyne. Besides the sorrowing husband there are left to mourn her loss a family of four sons, the eldest of whom is 16. Much regret is felt for her demise by the many old friends in Saugeen and Bruce Tpr. Miss Annie Kelly, book keeper in Ballachey, Laidlaw & Co's store, is a sister of the deceased, and she will leave for the west in a few days to take charge of her brother-in-law's home for a time.

Died in the West

The remains of George McGregor, who died very suddenly at Sedgwick, Alta., were brought east for burial, arriving here on Saturday night. The funeral took place on Sunday afternoon, from his former home on the 6th of Bruce, to Lorne Cemetery. The services were conducted by Mr McCauley, student pastor of the Baptist congregation at Glenis. The deceased was an unmarried man and was 40 years of age. He was a son of the late Thos McGregor, 6th Bruce. He had been with his brother at Sedgwick since August of last year. While working in British Columbia a few years ago he sustained an injury to his back that affected his health at times since. Four brothers and three sisters survive, viz: Alexander, at Schreiber, Ont., James at Sedgwick (both of whom came home with the remains); Mrs McLeod at Calumet, Mich.; Richard, Thomas, and Miss Bella in Bruce.

A Militia Call

According to a despatch from Ottawa Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, has issued a call to all militia officers, non-commissioned officers and men available for military service to report to divisional officers commanding at once. This order will affect quite a number of men of the 33rd Bruce Battalion, among whom are Major Thos. Hay and Lieut. E. G. Eckel, also the following, who were sergeants or corporals at Elora in "D" Company, Paisley: Irwin Mason, Pete McAllister, Albert and Frank Watson, John Heaton and Geo. Morton. The order does not mean that these volunteer militia men will have to go to the front, but they may be required to take charge of units in the new battalions that are to be organized, now that 100,000 more Canadian troops are to be provided for the front. They may be put on home defence duty to take the place of men who will be drafted for overseas service.

Enlistment Brisk

Four more of Paisley's sons have heard the call to duty and are willing to go to fight for their country, viz., Messrs. L. R. Pulman, Donald J. Bain and Ernest Pearce, who all enrolled in Toronto with that crack infantry corps, the Queen's Own Rifles, and are to report for duty on Thursday morning of this week, along with Mr Roddie McLennan, who has been in the city for some time. The three first named were down to the city last week, but returned home for a few days. They will probably leave again by the afternoon train on Wednesday. Messrs. Pulman and Pearce are going as members of the battalion band and as such will also serve as stretcher-bearers, the latter being one of the most dangerous positions the men have to fill while a battle is on, as they are called upon to carry the wounded off the field and in doing so must necessarily go where there is little or no shelter from the enemy's fire. Bain and McLennan go as infantrymen, and they are two who will put up a good fight in the trench or in a charge. Messrs Bernard Brown of Paisley and James Coates of Hideralic have enrolled here with recruiting officer Eckel, and Mr Horace Parker of Palmerston is enlisting at Hamilton.

Shooting Fatality near Elmwood

Charles Schilling, about thirty years of age, accidentally shot himself in the head at his brother's home near Elmwood on Monday and died soon afterwards. He was the youngest son of Louis Schilling of Hanover. He had been employed with his brother this summer. His mother and father had come for a visit shortly before the accident occurred. He intended going hunting in the afternoon. After dinner he went upstairs to change his clothes and while he was handling the gun it was accidentally discharged.

His Pluck Won Out

Major General Sir Sam Hughes is very popular with at least one soldier in training at Owen Sound, Private William Coffie, of Hanover. Coffie is but a shade over five feet in height, and when he went to the recruiting station was turned down for his lack of stature, being nearly two inches short. Some time afterwards Coffie overheard a man of Teutonic origin make some slighting remark about the Canadian soldiers, and though his opponent overtopped him by nearly a foot, he gave him a sound pummelling, all of which R J Hall M.P., a resident of Hanover learned in due time. At last he sent a personal letter with the facts of the case to General Hughes and the result was that in a few days an order came from the head of the Militia Department, authorizing Coffie to be taken on the overseas forces. And now it is Pte. Coffie, short but stocky, delighted and diligent, doing his drill with the latest Grey county spots.

Walkerton Family's Example

Probably no family in Walkerton or in Bruce is contributing mo the cause of Empire than that of Mr. Robert Russell of this town. Two stalwart sons are at present in the battle line, one is home on sick leave, and the fourth and youngest, Leith, left last Friday for the London training camp. Not satisfied with this, Mr. Russell himself, a vigorous man, offered himself for enlistment, but was not accepted on account of being over the age limit. This family needs no recruiting posters to urge it do its duty. It is a fine example of the kind of stuff that has won the Empire's battles.—Telescope.

Hallowe'en Pranks

Saturday and Sunday nights passed over very quietly for Hallowe'en, but on Monday night there were some doin's in town. Between the witching hours of 12 to 2 a.m., to quote the Scottish bard,

"The wind blew as 'twad blaw its last;
The rain came down in spates;
That night a child might understand
The deil had business on his hand."

That "warlocks and witches" had been abroad was abundantly evident by the number of misplaced articles that were to be seen on every hand, and the missing articles that could not be seen anywhere. The pranksters did not confine themselves altogether to small things. For instance: the spot on our most central main street corner upon which the popular manager of a financial institution is in the habit of pulling up his good automobile was occupied by a brand new, gaudily painted manure spreader. Upon the sidewalk in front of the business place of a prominent south end block owner who is known to entertain a desire for motor car proprietorship, there stood a McLaughlin runabout that might be considered just the thing for two congenial humans to use for jaunting about the country.

—The pensions the Canadian Government propose to pay returned soldiers will be graded according to the state of men's health or incapacity—being measured as 50 per cent., 75 per cent. or full pensions as the case may be. Some of the rates of pensions to be granted militiamen wounded or disabled on active service, during drill or training, or on other military duty (provided the disability was not due to his own fault or negligence) are shown in the following table:

Rank and file	$ 600	$ 480	$ 360	$ 240
Sergeant	720	576	432	288
Squad., battery, or Co. R. M. Sergt.	972	777	582	388
Master gunner, not W.O.	648	518	388	259

Pensions computed on active service, during drill or training, or on other military duty, as the following tables, provided the additional death was not due to his own fault or negligence, and was clearly due to the carrying out of his military duties:

Rank and file, $20 a month for widow and $5 a month for each child.

Sergeant, $30 a month for widow and $6 a month for each child.

Squad battery or company sergeant-major, squad, battalion or A.M. sergeant, color sergeant or staff-sergeant, $30 a month for widow and $6 a month for each child.

—How a drug famine is creeping upon us is being pointed out by those who are watching the steady climb in the prices of materials that have heretofore won little renown outside of the family medicine chest. Senna has gone up to seven times their usual price, and Egyptian figs are fifty cents instead of nine. "If war continues," declares one writer, "illness is going to be a more expensive luxury than ever before." Quinine costs five times as much to-day as it did a month ago—rising in two weeks from 40 cents an ounce to $2.25 an ounce. For camomile leaves, which come from Germany and Austria, wholesalers are paying 35 cents a pound more than in times of peace. The boar-hound herb, another old standby which is an Austrian product, has jumped from 6 to 15c, and licorice, imported from Smyrna, has risen from 6 to 20c. Olive oil has increased from 50c to 75c a gallon, permanganate of potash 12c to $1.15, Russian cantharides 75c to $4. Cod liver oil, despite its name, is made from crude oils which come from Norway, and the cost of the crude has advanced from $40 to $80 the barrel.

—Statistics of the Walkerton jail reveal that the bachelors and benedicts in Bruce were equally bad during the past year and that just as many of the one got into jail as the other. And with the sisterhood it is worse, the wedded variety getting pinched oftener than the unclaimed virgins. But where our hat blows off is that the Methodists needed police oftener than any other denomination, no less than 19 of this persuasion being jailed for crime. The fact that each prisoner cost fed for less than 10c. a day suggests that they didn't have any fruit out of season, or that the tables didn't exactly groan under the weight of the luxuries served up. But yet some of those gents came out fatter than mad and looking for all the world as if they had gorged until their sides ached. As stall-fed animals, however are generally fat, it may be that the inactivity of the prisoners helps the jailer out in putting on the grease. Be this as it may, Governor McKechnie is in a class by himself when it comes to making human lard-pails cheap.—Times.

CHAPTER XVII.

The world-honored and time-honored bard, Shakespeare, habitually looked beneath the mere plausible surface of possibility, and from the deep insight thereby gained, often put forth oracles at opposition to the usual routine of thought and expectation, yet which the eternal experiences of life continue to indorse as truths.

Were I writing a merely fictitious narrative, it would be in order now to describe the cruel opposition the lovers met. But I are writing a true story.

Left without father or mother or natural protectors, except a youthful step-dame, and an old uncle, to whom until two years past she had been a perfect stranger, Miss Vivian was not the first object of interest to any one around her.

It is true that when Rosalie made known her purpose to Mrs. Vivian the lady opposed the contemplated marriage with entreaties and tears. In yielding her first convenient, the sweet-lipped lady said, amid falling tears: "Oh, were he well established, Rosalie, there is no one in the world to whom I would resign you with so much pleasure and comfort, as to him whom you have chosen." And well I know, and deeply I feel, with you for an incentive, with his high moral principles and intellectual faculties, he must accomplish a brilliant destiny. But how much wiser to wait until he has conquered success!"

"And share his triumphs when I would not share his toils? No! no! no!"

"It would be so much safer, Rosalie!"

"And so much more prudent to allow him, in those moments of depression and despondency that must come, to think that it is only the successful statesman or jurist whose fortunes I would share, not those of the toiling aspirant! To turn a second Indis on his hands, and so forever and forever break down his faith in womanhood, in disinterestedness, and in truth! No! no! no! and a thousand times no!"

"If you should be a burden to him?"

"I will never be a burden to him! Mine is no sudden girlish fancy. It is a deep, earnest affection, arising from the profoundest sentiments of esteem and honor that ever woman felt for man, and the Father who inspired it will bless it."

"Oh, Rosalie! be practical, child!"

"Be faithful first, and practical afterward."

"Rosalie you don't know what you brave! Fancy yourself and Mark now married and housekeeping in some wretched log-cabin! Fancy yourself both down with that curse of new settlements, the ague, and no one to give you a cup of tea!"

"Dear mamma, the very bugbears that you have evoked only draw me on. Oh, do you think, mamma, that I could bear to stay here in safety and know that he was far away, exposed to all the privations of a pioneer life?"

"Nonsense! Danger is the natural element of man!"

"Yes, mamma; but illness, fever, burning thirst, solitude and helplessness are not. And if I thought that Mark were suffering all these things and I not near to nurse and comfort and soothe him, but separated from him by thousands of miles of mountains and plains, I tell you, mamma, it would nearly break my heart! It is no use! I must go with him, to meet whatever of good or ill fate has in store. I feel as if the worst calamity that could possibly befall me would be separation from him."

"Foolish girl! You love that broad-shouldered, robust man as tenderly as a mother loves her babe!"

"I love him with a tenderness that makes me alive to his least sorrow or pain; and yet with an esteem, with a depth of respect, that makes me aspire to his approbation as my highest good!"

"Oh, Rosalie, if you only had strength to endure the hardships of a Western life, I should feel less anxiety."

"Do not fear. I shall be able to endure, because 'my good will is to it;' and energetic, because I shall have a good motive. 'Out of the heart are the issues of life!' of will, purpose, hope, health, strength, enterprise, achievement, success! Out of the heart are the issues of all the good that can come back to us in time or eternity or in heaven!"

CHAPTER XVIII.

With Miss Vivian's uncle the difficulty was even less in obtaining his consent to the marriage with Mark Sutherland; and for the following reasons: Colonel Ashley worshiped his proud, talented son, St. Gerald; and in his estimation no interests could compete for an instant. Colonel Ashley liked Rosalie and wished her well, and he was resolved to do all he could to insure her future happiness. And that the marriage and departure of Mark Sutherland and Rosalie would tend to tranquilize the life of the disturbed husband, he could not now doubt.

It was dreadful to notice all the fatal effects of India's want of faith. The once haughty and self-possessed woman was growing spiritless and nervous. Her glorious beauty was wilting, as you would have seen some richly blooming flower wither suddenly without apparent cause—wither as if scorched by the burning breath of the sirocco. And the cause was apparent to every one around her, not excepting her bitterly wronged and most wretched husband. If it was fearful to see the ravages that misery had made in the glorious beauty of India, it was not less so to observe its desolating effect upon the splendid genius of St. Gerald.

It was now a stirring time with aspiring young statesmen. A great national crisis was at hand. St. Gerald, of all statesmen, should have been the most active, the most energetic. The eyes of his party were turned in anxiety toward him. A senator already, he is carried up on the tenth wave of popular favor! Should he serve to form well this time, there is no honor, no, not the highest in the gift of the people, to which he may not reasonably aspire! St. Gerald should be busy now, convening the people, making speeches, drawing up resolutions, and doing all those multifarious acts by which statesmen in the recess of Congress touch the secret springs of the great political machinery, to keep it in motion. St. Gerald should be up and doing, for now is the "tide" in his affairs, which "taken at the flood" may bear him on to fortune—aye, ultimately to the Presidential chair—for every day is destiny! But the young statesman is doing absolutely nothing.

Colonel Ashley perceives it all. And can he see the brilliant fortunes of his proud boy thus wrecked, if the sacrifice of Rosalie will help to avert the ruin?

Colonel Ashley, in fact, gave his full consent and approval to the engagement of Mark Sutherland and Rosalie Vivian. He even joined Mr. Sutherland in persuading Rosalie to fix an early day for the solemnization of the marriage.

And, having settled that matter to his satisfaction, he next sought Clement Sutherland, and, having informed him of the betrothal, entreated him to make some provision from the bride's fortune for the young couple, or at least to settle an annuity upon her until she should be of age.

But Clement Sutherland was proof against all arguments and entreaties. At last Colonel Ashley left him in indignation. He did not then know that hate and revenge were not the only reasons that constrained the guardian of Mark Sutherland's young bride to hold a death-grip upon her purse-strings. No one then suspected that the money-grubbing position of the man had tempted him into ruinous speculations and embezzlement of the orphan's funds.

A week after his betrothal, Mr. Lauderdale arrived, to fulfill his engagement with the "sparkling" young widow. He was received with the utmost pleasure and welcomed with cordial hospitality by Colonel Ashley.

The next week witnessed two bridals. Mr. Lauderdale and Miss Vivian were married at Ashley Hall, and at the same time and place, by the same minister, Mark Sutherland and Rosalie Vivian were united.

The next day there were two departures: Mr. and Mrs. Lauderdale bade an affectionate adieu to their friends, and set out for their palace home in the South; and Mark Sutherland, and Rosalie, his wife, departed for their log cabin in the West.

CHAPTER XIX.

"Rosalie, my own blessed wife, you spoke the truth, 'out of the heart are the issues of life!' I feel and recognize it now. It is with far different emotions that I tread this deck, to those which oppressed and discouraged my soul two years ago. Oh, Rosalie, can you love the wild West as you love your own sunny South?"

"The South is a beautiful, a luxuriant region, where, 'lapped in Elysium,' you may dream your soul away; but the West is a magnificently vigorous land, whose clarion voice summons you to action."

They were standing upon the hurricane deck of the steamer Indian Queen, which was puffing and blowing its rapid course down the Ohio River.

"Does my dear Rosalie perceive any very remarkable difference in these opposite shores?" asked Mark.

"Yes! I notice that one shore is thickly studded with thriving villages and flourishing fields, while the other is a comparative wilderness, with here and there a plantation house, and at long intervals a stunted town. What can be the reason of this?"

"Have you not already surmised the reason?"

The thoughtful eyes of Rosalie roved slowly over the scene, and then raised and fixed their earnest gaze upon her husband's face, and she said: "It is so. There is only one set of persons in the world who are more unhappy than the negroes."

"And they are——"

"Their masters."

"Yes, Rosalie; and it is from among their number that the first great reformer must arise!"

"Why do you think so, Mark?"

"From fitness; we are unwilling to be taught our duty by an antagonist who reasons in partial ignorance, of the facts, judges harshly and unjustly; all great successful reformers that the world has ever known have arisen —not from the outside, but from the very midst of the evil to be reformed. Martin Luther sprang from the bosom of the Roman Catholic Church and priesthood. Nay, Christ himself came not in clouds of glory, clothed with the majesty of Godhead from Heaven—he arose from the midst of the people whom he came to redeem. So, Rosalie, the apostle of liberty must arise in the South."

She had listened to his words with loving and reverent attention, and now she fixed her gaze upon his eyes and said with penetrating earnestness:

"Mark Sutherland, Thou art the man!"

His very soul thrilled to her inspiring words and glance. He walked hastily from her side in agitation, but, soon returning, said:

"Nay, Rosalie, nay; this mission is not for me. I hear no voice from heaven calling me to the work!"

"Have you listened? The voice of God speaks not often in thunder from heaven. It is a 'still, small voice,' breathed from the depths of your spirit. The word of God is within you!"

He pressed his hand to his brow, throwing back the dark hair that fell in waves around it.

"You trouble my soul even as the despending angel troubled the pool of Bethesda, Rosalie!"

"Only to arouse its powers," she answered. While speaking, she anxiously sought his eyes, which at last met hers in a loving gaze, and then she continued, "You have consecrated your mission—no only such a mission can be consecrated, by a great sacrifice—can you pause now?"

"Rosalie! Rosalie! why had I not known you better before? Why could I not have loved you only from the first?"

"I had to grow up for you. I had to be left to mature in solitude and silence. I was a child three years ago."

"And you are a child still in all things but the inspired wisdom of your heart!"

The boat wended on her way, reached the mouth of the Ohio River, and turned up the Mississippi; and in five days more landed at the new village of S——, in the Northwest Territory.

S—— was at the very outskirts of pioneer civilization. It was situated on the right or east bank of the Upper Mississippi, and the dwellings were scattered up and down the right bluff.

They followed their baggage into the skiff and were landed just as the sun arose, gilding the windows of the village and lighting up into splendor all the glorious scene.

He pressed her hand and turned upon her a look of unspeakable love as he handed her to the shore.

There was a porter even in that rude, remote place. He took charge of the baggage and led the way to the hotel on the top of the bluff.

It was a large, unfinished, two-story frame house, rudely built of rough pine boards, unpainted without and unplastered within. Our young couple followed their guide, the porter, who was also the landlord, into the large bare parlor, which was also the kitchen of the inn. This room was scantily furnished with a few rough chairs, a table neatly enough set out for breakfast, and a glowing cooking stove in full blast, at which stood the cook, who was also the landlady, getting breakfast.

The rudeness of the whole scene disturbed Mark, for Rosalie's sake. She felt that it did. She looked at him with a gladdening smile, exclaiming:

"Oh, I like it, Mark. Everything is so new and strange, and so large and grand," she added, going to one of the windows, and looking out upon the magnificent virgin country. "The air is fine here, Mark. There is a springiness and life in it I never felt before."

"Yes—it's allowed to be healthy in these parts; no ague here," said the landlady.

"And so near the river—that is strange," said Mark.

"Well, you see the winds blow mostly from the shore. And then, many folks allow that this, being a high, limestone country, is naturally healthy."

"Have you many boarders now?" inquired Rosalie, interesting herself in the fortunes of her hostess.

"Only bachelors, for constant," replied the landlady, setting the coffee-pot on the table, and ordering her lord to blow the horn. She then invited her guests to breakfast, and had just begun to help them, when her other boarders—half a dozen robust, but earnest, intelligent-looking men—entered, and gathered around the table. The breakfast was plain, but substantial, well-cooked, and abundant.

After breakfast "the bachelors" went about their various businesses —some to their stores, some to their workshops. Mark followed his wife to the window, and said:

"Rosalie, I must leave you here, at least till noon."

"You must?"

"Yes; there is much to be done. Lauderdale's law-office must be opened, and my sign tacked up, and the place prepared for any business that may turn up. Then I have to write and send off an advertisement to the nearest newspaper—which, by the way, is published in a town thirty miles distant. And lastly, I have to look up a cabin, or part of a frame house. I shall try to be back again at twelve. Good-by."

COWFIGHTS IN SWITZERLAND.

Last Remnants of a Custom That Is Rapidly Disappearing.

Much has been written about the bloody bullfights in Spain and southern France, but the cowfights of Canton Wallis, or Valtais, as the French Swiss call it, in Switzerland, although quainter and more interesting,—besides being far more humane,—have already been heard of beyond the borders of the tiny state.

The favorite arena is the grazing ground of Phion, near Sitten, or Sion. The time is the beginning of July, when the cattle go to the upper Alpine pastures; and there are sometimes 250 cows in the procession. The winner, known as the "Queen," marches during the whole year at the head of the line, and the herd to which she belongs has throughout the season an undisputed right to the richest and sweetest grass.

The little Walliser cow of the Eringer valley is a dark brown or black animal, of an excitable temperament, with sharp-pointed horns and gleaming eyes. She climbs like a goat, and well knows how to find her way over the steep and rocky pastures of Wallis, which are often seven or eight thousand feet above sea level.

To excite the cow to the utmost, the herdsman frequently gives her during the fortnight before the battle a daily ration of bread steeped in wine; but a regulation that is strictly enforced forbids the owner to interfere during the fight either by word or deed.

The journey up the mountain side is usually over about eleven o'clock in the morning, and before noon all the cows are assembled on the battlefield, where the pastor of the neighboring village pronounces a blessing over them. The field is then cleared and the arena marked off.

Each owner fastens on the horns of his cows a sort of thimble with an open top, and to prevent serious accidents he files off to the level of the metal the sharp points that protrude. The peasant girls, in picturesque dresses and four-cornered, broad-ribboned hats, group themselves in the back-ground, and the crowd of excited male spectators—a certain number of tourists are always found among them—forms into a half circle. The cows, lowing and tearing up the earth with their horns, run to the middle of the ring. They regard one another with threatening looks, and apparently measure the strength and weakness of their antagonists. They paw the ground, and finally rush upon one another, thrusting vigorously with their horns. One by one the weaker and less eager fighters withdraw humiliated from the strife, and the number of competitors is soon reduced to about thirty.

The fighting consists chiefly in concussions of head and horns—not in efforts to inflict wounds on the vulnerable parts of the body. The conqueror presses forward; the worsted cow sinks on its knees, rises again, rapidly yields ground, and finally, with backward springs, gives up its place in the combat, and is driven out of the arena. Even insignificant wounds are unusual, and a veterinary is seldom present.

The interest centres in the queen of the previous year. Foaming at the mouth, her hide shining with perspiration, she bellows forth defiance, and seeks fresh encounters. Several cows come near, apparently accepting her challenge, hesitate a moment, and then draw back.

The culmination of the excitement is, naturally, the strife between two queens; the struggle of a former victor for the restoration of her rights, or the dethroning of the last year's queen by a new champion.

To the student of animal psychology these cow-fights offer a curious problem. The cow is the emblem of stolidity and stupidity; yet in the cow-fights of Canton Wallis the cow appears as an exceedingly spirited and ambitious animal. She remembers the battle of the preceding year. She feels the joy of victory and the shame of defeat. She gauges her own strength, and accepts or refuses a challenge according to the dictates of her judgment. She knows that today it concerns her to strive for the victory, although all the rest of the year her owner will energetically repress any belligerent inclinations on her part. She has an obscure apprehension of the fact that the assembled spectators expect something from her. She comprehends the rules of the game.

The cow-fights in Wallis are among the last remnants of the original and picturesque folk customs that are rapidly disappearing, and will probably soon be discontinued and forgotten.

PRACTICAL FARMING

Replanting the Woodlot.

Special effort should be made to secure the reproduction of the trees removed from the farm woodlot during the cutting season just passed. In many cases sprouts are counted on for this reproduction and for certain purposes such as fuel, posts, and shelter, they can be relied upon to furnish the desired material. When this second crop is cut in its turn, however, the old stumps have lost most, if not all of their vitality and unless some vigorous seedlings have grown up in the meantime, the value of the woodlot is greatly impaired. Since it requires many years to build up a woodlot which has been allowed to run out, it is a wise plan to insure the production of some good healthy seedling trees each year by planting species in the openings created by the winters cutting.

During early life the sprouts, because of the advantage of a previously established root system, will outstrip the little seedlings and may deprive them of the requisite amount of light for good growth. Therefore, in the first thinning or cutting of the sprouts some special consideration should be shown the young seedlings.

The method of planting the seeds will depend upon the species used. Walnut, hickory and all of the oaks can be planted about two inches deep in a hole made with a dibble or spud. The smaller seeds such as red and white elm, maple and ash may be planted by removing the coarser litter from a small spot and putting on a few seeds, covering them very lightly with fine soil and a little litter.

In many cases it is better to raise or buy seedlings of the species having small seeds and transplant them in the desired location.

Age of Horses.

The age of a horse is most easily determined by the cups in the teeth. At four years, the horse has his permanent front teeth. At five, there are deep black cavities in the centres of all lower nippers. At six, these cavities disappear in the two centre lower nippers. Two more lose their cavities for each year to the eighth, and then the two centre upper nippers lose their cavities, and each year two more, until at the age of ten the teeth are all smooth or retain only a small black speck. After the age of ten the length of the teeth and tushes must be judged—even then the age can be determined only approximately.

Souring and Cover Crops.

Never turn the clover or other crop under without first thoroughly cutting up with a disc harrow, as the material ploughed under in a layer seriously interferes with the capillary action of the moisture in the soil. The effect of turning under in a layer are what is sometimes called souring the soil with green manuring crops. Double disc the cover crop two or three times with a sharp disc harrow before ploughing; plough well by taking a narrow furrow and edging rather than inverting the furrow; then double disc the land again rather deeply, and no injurious effect will result, however large the growth may be.

Profits on the Farm.

You will not be likely to have a balance on the right side of your farm ledger if such a scene as this may be found on your farm. After a farmer has paid his good money for farm equipment it is wasteful to leave it out to take the weather wherever it was last used. The winter months is not a bad time to construct sheds and shelves for the equipment. There should be a place for everything on the farm and everything should be kept in its place when not in use.

Just So.

"I saw a professor of magic remove thirty yards of ribbon, fourteen plumes and seven buckles from a hat."

A Wise Kid.

"Johnny, do you know that your mother has been looking for you?" asked the neighbor next door.

"Sure I do," replied Johnny; "that's the reason she can't find me!"

Unkind.

"Sometimes I think—" he began.

"But not often, I suppose!" interrupted the rude girl.

Miss Gossip—"Mrs. Fewyears tells me she wasn't to when she was married." Miss Telltale—"Well, I should say she wasn't. She was 29."

On a fine day a weather-glass on a hill a thousand feet high will declare, that the weather is stormy.

Oyster Dishes.

Fried Oysters Creole.—Allow six oysters to each person. Drain the oysters, salt and pepper to taste and roll them in bread crumbs. Drop in a frying pan of boiling lard, having sufficient lard to allow the oysters to swim in the grease. Remove when a golden brown and place on brown paper to drain. Serve on a bed of fried parsley, as given below.

Fried Parsley for Oysters, Meats, etc.—Pick off the delicate leaves of branches of very young parsley, wash well, drain and put in a frying pan in which you have placed a tablespoonful of lard, medium hot. Fry slowly and use as a garnish or as needed.

Stewed Oysters.—Take about 4 dozen large oysters, and drain in a colander. Mix 1 tablespoonful of flour and 1 of butter together. Put 1 pint of oyster liquor on the fire and add the flour and butter blended. Have ready in another saucepan a pint of rich, hot cream. After 5 minutes, add this to the oyster liquor, stirring constantly to prevent burning. Salt and pepper to taste. Let it boil up once and then add the oysters. Serve after 3 minutes. This is a well-known Southern delicacy.

Oysters au Parmesan.—Brown one cup of grated breadcrumbs in a little butter and then butter a shallow dish and stew the oysters with the breadcrumbs. Drain the oysters and dry with a clean towel, season highly, and place them, one by one, on the breadcrumbs, strewing chopped parsley over them. Then grate one or two cupfuls of parmesan cheese over this, using your own judgment as to the necessary amount. Now sprinkle this lightly with another coating of breadcrumbs and pour over this a gill of white wine. Place in the oven, which should be very hot, and let this remain about 15 minutes, until quite brown. When it is removed pour over it a little drawn butter, garnish with lemon and serve.

Steamed Oysters.—Use as many oysters as necessary, allowing at least six to each person. This is a favorite old Creole dish, and formerly it was the entree which accompanied many Saturday meals, like the good old baked beans and brown bread in Boston. Have ready a pot of boiling water, drain the oysters in their shells and put them in a shallow pan, the bottom being perforated. Cover and put them over the steamer. Let them stand about 10 minutes, then remove and put into a hot dish, season with pepper and cayenne, and serve with drawn butter. Those who prefer the natural taste of the oysters steam them in their shells. This is done by washing the oysters thoroughly on the outside, placing them in the steamer and cover. Let them remain about 15 minutes in the steamer until the shells open easily, and serve. The steamed oyster must be eaten very hot to appreciate its flavor.

Humble Pie.

Humble pie is still met with in the rural districts of England, Scotland and Ireland. It is not merely the proverbial dish which the proud must sometimes eat. Originally it was a meat or game pie made for the servants of noblemen and furnished an appetizing and economical method of utilizing the less desirable parts of animals brought in from the chase.

After a prolonged and successful hunt, a prodigious humble pie was made, sufficient for all the retainers on the estate. This was eaten in the great kitchen after the nobleman and his guests had enjoyed the choicer portions. The pastry used for this huge pie was originally made from the drippings from the roasts of venison or game, which increased the savory flavor of the finished dish.

The modern humble pie can be baked in a deep fireproof pudding dish of a size to meet the needs of the family. Line the dish with plain crust and place large pieces of raw potato here and there, so that the crust shall be weighted down and not lose its shape while baking. When partly cooked remove from the oven, take out the pieces of raw potato and fill with a hot mixture of whatever material is at hand, such as remnants of cooked veal, beef, liver, ham or fowl, enriched with bits of finely chopped suet, highly seasoned with onion juice, minced parsley, pepper and salt, and moistened with gravy or broth.

Stale bread, cut in dice, cubes of potato or other cooked vegetable may be added if the supply of meat is scant. Smooth the top of the filling neatly, arrange strips of crust in lattice fashion and return to the oven until the top is well browned. This dish somewhat resembles the economical shepherd's pie, which is topped with mashed potato instead of crust, and which does not have anything between the meat filling and the fireproof dish.

Either of these dishes makes a hearty meal if served with gravy or tomato sauce and affords an economical and easy method of utilizing leftovers of meat or vegetables. Where Irish stew is left from a previous meal this will be found a good filling for a humble pie.

WAR EXPENDITURES.

$600,000,000 Is France's Bill For War Goods.

The total for 14 months shows more than 3,000,000,000 francs ($600,000,000) spent for cannon and ammunition, at the rate of 106,000,000 a month in 1914, 255,000,000 a month during the first half of 1915, and 370,000,000 a month during the quarter ending September 30.

The expenditure for artillery and ammunition are exceeded only by the item of food and forage, which amounted to 4,250,000,000 francs. Next in order come the clothing and quartering of the troops, about 2,600,000,000, and the pay of the troops, about 2,000,000,000.

Vehicles, including automobiles, were bought to the amount of 223,000,000 francs, and a billion and a half was paid for horses and mules. The sanitary department has cost 647,000,000 to date, an average of 38,000,000 a month during 1914, and 53,000,00 a month in 1915. The total expenditure for distinctly military operations from July 31, 1914, to September 3, 1915, is about 16,000,000,000 francs, making up 73 per cent. of the budget during that period.

A billion and a half has been spent for the relief of soldiers' families and workers thrown out of employment, while 100,000,000 have been spent for the feeding and sheltering of refugees.

The subscriptions to the national defence bonds and obligations have furnished 68 per cent. of the funds for the total expenditures of 22,000,000,000 during the 14 months ending September 30, the established taxes have produced 16 per cent. and the remaining 16 per cent. has been advanced by the Bank of France.

ROARING FURNACES OF HEAT.

Something About Volcanoes and Earthquakes.

The name volcano is derived from Vulcanus, the god of fire of the ancient Romans. They are generally divided into three classes—active, intermittent and extinct. Stromboli, in the Mediterranean, is a good example of the first class, making a fiery beacon light for sailors on the neighboring sea. Etna and Vesuvius are good examples of the second kind. To the popular mind they are the chimneys of the vast roaring furnace of heat in the bowels of the earth, and undoubtedly serve as vents for the powerful gases that might, if confined, create a total destruction to the crust upon which we live.

There are supposed to be some three hundred and over of these chimneys upon the face of the earth, two-thirds being situated upon islands. America has about one hundred and fourteen of these, and more than any other geographical division of the globe.

Earthquakes appear to be from the same causes as volcanic eruptions, the energy of vapors and gases in the earth struggling to find a vent.

The same night that the city of Lima, South America, was shaken down, four new volcanic vents were found in the Andes.

Soon after the earthquake in Lisbon in 1730 there were some of the most violent eruptions ever known.

After the destruction of Caracas the volcano of St. Vincent became active, and at the beginning the earth was shaken for a space of nearly twenty-six thousands miles.

The movement of the earth during an earthquake may be vertical, horizontal or whirling. The most destructive shocks are generally the shortest in duration. That of Lisbon, Nov. 1, 1755, lasted about six minutes. The three shocks that reduced Caracas to ruins, March 26, 1812, were over in a minute, and most of the damage to the city of Conception, Feb. 20, 1835, was done in six seconds. At Lima, Peru, an average of nearly fifty shocks in a year are expected, and in some parts of South America over sixty have been counted in a year, not reckoning the slight ones, which are still more numerous.

The permanent elevation or depression of large tracts of land is one of the peculiar phenomena attending these convulsions of nature. During the earthquake at Lisbon the new quay subsided and the spot was covered by water six hundred feet deep. Many other remarkable instances are on record. They have been terribly destructive to life as well as property. A visitation of the kind in Peru, 1746, killed 3,800; 1797, from a similar cause, 1,600 Peruvians perished. At Caracas, 1812, 10,000 men were destroyed, 60,000 at Lisbon in 1745, 40,000 in the New Calabrias and Sicily in 1783, and 20,000 more by sickness result ng from it.

Ancients Used Gas in Warfare.

The earliest use of deleterious gases in siege warfare is recorded in the history of the Peloponnesian wars from 431 to 404 B.C. During this struggle between the Athenians and Spartans and their respective allies the cities of Plates and Delium were besieged. Wood saturated with pitch and sulphur was set on fire and burnt under the walls of these cities in order to generate chocking and poisonous fumes, which would stupify the defenders and render the task of the attacking forces less difficult.

A DEVASTATED TOWN.

French Village Received 9,000 Shells in Six Days.

The village of Sermaize-les-Bains will have the double honor of figuring in history as the extreme right of the position of the 4th French army in the battle of the Marne, and of being the first of the completely devastated towns to rise from their ashes. A year ago it was a local sugar refining centre and a watering-place of charming cottages and villas and some luxurious mansions; its population was about 3,000. The 12th of September there remained not 40 of these houses erect, and none of these were undamaged.

There was no fighting in the town itself, and no soldiers were ever quartered there, yet it received 9,000 shells in six days—10 for each building and more than three for each inhabitant—during the week of the battle of the Marne. There were few casualties among the civilians, for those that had not evacuated took shelter in cellars. What buildings remained erect when the Germans retreated were set afire.

To-day there is a "Hotel de Voyageurs," filled with guests, a "Grand Bazaar," a dressmaking and a millinery establishment, a grocer, a butcher, a barber and a dealer in garden seeds, doing a thriving business.

The Quakers have erected 58 temporary dwellings, and here and there more permanent structures have been put up by the inhabitants with funds loaned by the Department of the Marne. Seventeen hundred of the inhabitants have returned.

HINDU CREMATIONS THERE.

Funeral Pyres for Dead Soldiers Are Lit Near Brighton, England.

A strange consequence of the war is that funeral pyres for Indian soldiers are being lighted on the Sussex Downs in the south of England.

Major S. P. James, M.D., the head of the Kitchener Hospital at Brighton, which accommodates more than 2,000 Indian patients, stated at the Royal Sanitary Institute Congress that the bodies of the Hindu soldiers who die in the hospital are cremated on a specially prepared site at Patcham, on the Downs.

The burning is done on a funeral pyre of wood logs, in precisely the same manner and with the same ceremonies as those performed in India. The cremation is conducted by a member of the same caste as that to which the dead man belonged.

In order to prevent the different castes from "losing caste," eight different kinds of diet have to be prepared, and there are separate sets of cookhouses for six different classes of men.

1300 In One Grave.

It is doubtful that any place in the war zone contains a grave of such proportions as Pietrokow, Poland. Beside the little Russian cemetery, itself filled with individual graves of both Russians and Germans, is a vast mound, covering 1,300 Russians who fell in the fighting there last November. The grave, which is at one corner of the battlefields, is marked by more than a score of crosses, each bearing the names of the men lying under it.

Young titmice are so greedy that their parents sometimes provide them with no less than six thousand caterpillars a day.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, NOVEMBER 7.

Lesson VI.—Joash Repairs the Temple, 2 Kings 11. 21 to 12. 16.
G. T.—2 Cor. 9. 7.

I. Neglect to Repair the Temple (Verses 4-6):

Verse 4. Jehoash said to the priests—Several years after his accession to the throne. In 2 Chron. 24. 7 we have an account of the way the sons of Athaliah ruined the temple.

All the money of the hallowed things—That which was given for the vessels and accessories of the temple service. (See 1 Kings 7. 48-51).

For whom each man is rated—See Exod. 30. 12; Lev. 22. 18-23; 27. 2-8; Deut. 16. 10.

5. From his acquaintance—In the canvass for funds, each person was to go to those whom he knew. The modern method of soliciting funds is very like the old.

Repair the breaches of the house—The word repair means to fill up, to calk, indicating the sort of holes in the temple walls.

6. In the three and twentieth year—Jehoash was now about thirty years old.

7. Why repair ye not the breaches?—As no blame was attached to the priests by the king for their neglect in keeping the temple in repair, it is presumable that the temple offerings had so decreased that there really was no money on hand for the work of restoration. Their honesty was not impugned, for in verse 9 we read they were put in charge of the public offerings.

Take no more money—The "house to house" collection ordered in 2 Chron. 24. 5 was now to cease and the offerings were to be made beside the altar in the temple itself.

II. The Chest of Money (Verses 9-12).

9. All the money that was brought—See 2 Chron. 24. 9, 10.

10. When they saw that there was much money in the chest—They could determine the amount by the weight of the chest.

Put up in bags and counted the money—As the money was uncoined gold and silver, it was first tied in bundles, each bundle weighed and counted.

11. Into the hands of them that did the work—That is, it was paid in gross to the contractors, who in turn paid the carpenters, masons, etc.

WOMEN DOCTORS WANTED.

Salaries Offered Double Those Paid Men Before the War.

The demand for women doctors exceeds the supply, according to a statement by the London School of Medicine for Women. Even the posts of house physician and house surgeon in the hospitals, heretofore always held by men, are offered to women. This is particularly true of the provincial hospitals. Women are also taking the practices of men who have gone to the front.

Boards of guardians are so hard up for doctors that, casting aside their inherited prejudices, they offer positions to women at increased salary. Before the war, an infirmary doctor in the Whitechapel district, who was always a man, received only $800 a year and emoluments. Now the same post is advertised for a woman at $1000 and emoluments.

The Women's Medical School of London has trained 600 women doctors now in practice, and has 220 students on its rolls. The class entering the Autumn terms is larger by 60 applicants than ever before.

WAR TEACHING ECONOMY.

Sunflower Oil Is Used in German Cooking.

The war as a teacher of economy is scoring new results from time to time even among a people already so economical as the Germans. The Berlin newspapers are calling attention to the extraordinary increase this year in the cultivation of the common sunflower; it is seen in great quantities in the gardens in the suburbs of Berlin and other cities and along railways everywhere. In previous years the only practical value of the plant was in feeding the seeds to birds, but this year the seeds are used to make an oil which is pronounced equal to the best olive oil for cooking purposes.

A writer is also pointing to further possibilities of the plant. The oilcake left after making oil, he says, is an excellent feed for animals, whereas the seeds themselves can be roasted and used as a substitute for coffee. The young shoots and undeveloped leaves can also be cooked and eaten as a palatable substitute for spinach.

In Belgium, too, the Germans are turning their thoughts toward discovering new uses for old and familiar plants. An agricultural weekly published by the German authorities there has just been showing that tea can be made from tender, half-grown leaves of the blackberry and raspberry plants, which has all the qualities of its famous Chinese cousin without its nerve-disturbing effect.

DOGS GREAT AID IN FRENCH ARMY

FOLLOW GERMAN LEAD IN USING CANINES.

Trained for Three Classes of Work, Patrol, Linking, and Ambulance Duty.

Before the war the French made very little use of dogs for military purposes. The Germans began training them for war as long ago as 1885, while the French paid no attention to the subject until a dozen years later, and then only for ambulance work. At the outbreak of the war the Germans had 35,000 dogs ready to be mobilized. To-day there are only 1,200 dogs employed along the whole French front.

A French author, Aurelien Scholl, describing German manoeuvres, made fun of the company of ambulance dogs:

"Before General Waldersee there passed in review the Second Bulldog Brigade, the Frst Regiment of Bowwows and the Second Regiment of Imperial Poodles. Dogs over seven years enter the Landwehr, and all those who have their tails in the shape of a trumpet are enrolled in the band."

"Three classes of dogs are now being used at the front," said Secretary O. Bert, of the French Association for Training War Dogs to a newspaper correspondent in Paris recently. Bert, who is back wounded from the front, was in charge of the detachment of war dogs at Arras last December. "They are patrol dogs, linking dogs, and ambulance dogs," he said. "The first class are always of the sheepdog breed, chiefly from Picardy or Flanders, and noted for their intelligence and sense of smell. Their calm temperament, too, counts.

Terrier Too Nervous.

"The fox terrier also was tried, but his nervous system was found to be too delicate and highly strung and consequently his temperament is too excitable. The sheepdog's sense of smell is wonderful; he easily detects the presence of an enemy a hundred or even a hundred and fifty yards away.

"The training of the dog for sentinel and patrol work, when he is always accompanied by soldiers, is simple and speedy. Of course, there is, first of all, a selection of specially intelligent dogs made in Paris, but when the dogs are selected have been sent to the front it requires only four nights' teaching to make them fit for their work. The chief difficulty is to make them learn not to bark, but only growl. Violence is never used; a tap or two on the head is enough when they start barking.

"The training of dogs for linking purposes—that is, for keeping two bodies of soldiers in touch with one another—requires two months. The course for an ambulance dog is nearly a year. The ambulance dog, unlike the patrol or linking dog, must be taught to bark so as to give notice to the battlefield searchers when he has found a wounded man.

Famous Dogs.

"In the case of patrol and linking dogs there must always be some one whom the dog knows at the point to which he is to be sent. The dog must have exceptional qualities if he is to act independently; if he is to be used, for instance, for dragging a stretcher out to wounded men under fire, or small portable kitchens on broad-gauge wheels to men in an advanced fighting line, or at a listening post.

"I have already three sons and a son-in-law with the colors; now I give my dog—and vive la France!" wrote one father of a family to the association when offering his dog.

Some ambulance dogs are famous. To mention only three: There is "Loulou," the gift of the poet Edmund Rostand to the French army; "Stop," of the Fifteenth Army corps, who has saved scores of lives, and "Flora," of the Twelfth Alpine Chasseurs, who did fighting work for four days running under a rain of shell without receiving a wound.

THE COMFORTER.

Silent is the house. I sit
In the firelight and knit,
At my ball of soft grey wool
Two grey kittens gently pull—
Pulling back my thoughts as well,
From that distant, red-rimmed hell,
And hot tears the stitches blur
As I knit a comforter.

"Comforter" they call it—yes,
Such it is for my distress,
For it gives my restless hands
Blessed work. God understands
How we women yearn to be Doing something ceaselessly—
Anything but just to wait
Idly for a clicking gate!

So I knit this long, grey thing,
Which some fearless lad will fling
Round him in the icy blast,
With the shrapnel whistling past;
"Comforter" it may be then,
Like a mother's touch again,
And at last, not grey, but red,
Be a pillow for the dead.

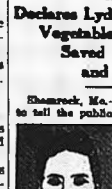
—"One of the most influential agricultural papers in the Dominion," is the way others refer to The Weekly Sun, of Toronto. It is a paper which appeals to the wide-awake farmers. Independent and fearless, it has always guarded the best interests of Canadian agriculture. Aside from that, its accurate and carefully compiled market reports and summaries give the reader a practical grasp of market conditions. "You have saved me dollars," is the repeated recommendation of hundreds of its readers. The Sun is on the ground, it is the paper for the farmer who rolls up his sleeves, and to those who are farming for profit its market reports are worth many times a subscription price.

WALKERTON

The big fine of $300 levied in Walkerton on the trio who conducted the Hanover home boat, has been cancelled by the Department, and the costs only of the action which amount to about $200, will be collected from the three who, it seems, were construed by the law as running a club house on the Saugeen river. On account of this being the first conviction of its kind here, the department decided that the payment of the costs would be sufficient punishment for this initial offence.

Having enclosed her name and a note in one of the pairs of socks she knitted for the soldiers, Miss Ellie Freeman received word here on Monday from a young Toronto soldier at the front saying he had received the socks in France from the Red Cross Society, and thanking her heartily for the donation. He sent Miss Freeman in return a small Belgian coin as a souvenir, and a long newsy letter from the front.

Constable Jos H Armstrong, who was mulcted nearly $50 last June by Kincardine magistrates on a trespass charge in connection with a dog case, appealed before Judge Greig of Walkerton at the Division Court in Tiverton last week and won out. As Wm McKenzie, who claimed to own the dog, was assessed nearly $100 for assaulting two or three fellows over the animal, the canine is becoming noted for the pile of cash that has been changing hands over it.



To be mistaken for a German spy and have an officer rush up and try to place the handcuffs on him, was the unique but unpleasant experience of Mr K M Taylor, manager of the Merchants Bank here, one night last week while stopping at a Wiarton hotel on his way back from a hunting trip on the Bruce Peninsula. A detective, who was apparently on the search for pro Germans, imbibed, it seems, considerably too much booze, and on encountering the Walkerton banker in the hotel became openly suspicious of the

REMARKABLE CASE of Mrs. HAM

Shamrock, Mo.—"I feel it my duty to tell the public the condition of my health before using your medicine. I had failing, inflammation and congestion, female weakness, pains in both sides, backaches and bearing down pains, was short of memory, nervous, impatient, passed sleepless nights, and had neither strength nor energy. There was always a fear and dread in my mind, I had cold, nervous, weak spells, hot flashes over my body." I had a place in my right side that was so sore that I could hardly bear the weight of my clothes. I tried medicines and doctors, but they did me little good, and I never expected to get out again. I got Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier, and I certainly would have been in grave or in an asylum if your medicines had not saved me. But now I can work all day, sleep well at night, eat anything I want, have no hot flashes or weak, nervous spells. All pains, aches, fears and dreads are gone, my house, children and husband are no longer neglected, as I am almost entirely free of the bad symptoms I had before taking your remedies, and all is pleasure and happiness in my home."—Mrs. JOSEPH HAM, R. Distribution of Seed Grain and Potatoes

By instructions of the Hon. Minister of Agriculture a free distribution of superior sorts of grain and potatoes will be made during the winter and spring to Canadian farmers. The samples will consist of spring wheat (about 5 lbs.), white oats (about 4 lbs.), barley (about 5 lbs.), and field peas (about 3 lbs.) These will be sent out from Ottawa.

A distribution of potatoes (in 3-lb. samples) will be carried on from several of the experimental farms, the Central farm at Ottawa supplying only the provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

Each application must be separate and must be signed by the applicant. Only one sample of grain and one of potatoes can be sent to each farm. If both samples are asked for in the same letter only one will be sent.

Applications on any kind of printed form cannot be accepted.

The destruction by fire of the cereal building at Ottawa, which contained grain-cleaning machinery and a large stock of seed grain for distribution, may make it necessary to curtail the distribution to a certain extent. We shall fill as many as possible of the applications which conform to the rules; but requests received after the end of December will probably be too late. Samples cannot be sent in response to applications (no matter when received) which fail to state clearly the needs of the applicant, his experiences in crop-raising and the character of the soil on which he intends to sow the seed.

All applications for grain (and applications from the provinces of Ontario and Quebec for potatoes) should be addressed to the Dominion Cerealist, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa. Such applications require no postage. If otherwise addressed delay and disappointment may occur.

Applications for potatoes from farmers in any other province should be addressed (postage prepaid) to the superintendent of the nearest branch experimental farm in that province.

J H GRISDALE,
Director Dom. Experimental Farm.

Death of a Former Paisleyite

Martha Wells McCallum, a former resident of Paisley who had been living in Aurora for a number of years, died at her home in that town on Nov. 4th. The deceased was the widow of the late Peter McCallum, the well-known auctioneer of forty years ago in this section. She was in her 76th year. A family of one son and four daughters survive, all of whom are married except the youngest daughter. Many old friends here will regret to learn of Mrs. McCallum's death.

A Big Turnout to See the Recruits Off

Hundreds of citizens and all the school children were at the station to cheer on the three young men, Pearce, Putnam and Bain, who left to take up training with the 95th Battalion in Toronto. Every available member of the band was on the musical end of the demonstration, and enlivened the proceedings with bright selections. Reeve Ballachey presented the municipal cheques for $10 to each of the three, at the same time making a brief and encouraging address. Rousing cheers were given as the train moved out, and the brave boys stood on the rear platform waving flags until they disappeared from view.

—Miss Georgina McBeath has arrived home from a three months' visit to friends in the West.

—The new cement flume at Lockerby Mills is now completed and the mill is in operation again.

—The Public Library will not be open on Thursday, as the Librarian is attending the District Library Institute at St. Marys.

Strawberries, Nov. 1st.

To pick summer fruit at the beginning of winter is not an every year occurrence in this region, but on Monday of last week ripe berries were picked in the fields on Mr. Wm. Pearce's farm. There was a profusion of blossom to be seen on the vines at that time.

Leaving Town

Mr. D. H. Cooper, who has been in charge of the bakeshop at P. S. McLachlan's for four years, has bought a business in Bloomfield, Ont., and is removing to that place this week. Mr. Cooper is a first-class tradesman who was always at his post, and by his decision to launch out for himself the town loses an estimable family of citizens. Success to them.

Wants $1500 Damages

After Mr. Angus McInnes, of Bruce, had his arm accidentally injured a few months ago by a small bullet fired from a rifle in the hands of Mr. P. C. Kennedy, of Paisley, the latter paid some $60 for the doctor bills and hospital expenses in connection with the case, and also offered Mr McInnes $200 to cover all loss and sufferings he experienced. This offer does not seem to have been considered satisfactory, as Mr. Kennedy has been notified by lawyer D. Robertson, of Walkerton, that a suit for $1500 damages has been entered in High Court. As the suit was not entered in time to be heard at the Bruce county sessions this fall, the plaintiff is asking that the case be heard at Owen Sound.

Huron—Bruce Battalion

On a call issued by Lieut-Col. Coombe, of Clinton, the officers of Huron's 33rd Regiment were called together Friday night in Clinton, when it was unanimously decided to organize an overseas battalion, if Bruce County will join in, to be known as the Huron-Bruce Battalion. Representatives were present from Seaforth, Goderich, Dungannon, Porter's Hill, Exeter and Clinton, and a committee of six officers was appointed to meet with a similar committee from Bruce County in the town of Wingham on November 15. Mayor Reed, of Goderich, was appointed to secure recruiting leagues in the various municipalities, and the boys will be trained locally in companies of 25 and 50 until spring opens.

PRACTICAL FARMING

The Brood Mare on the Farm.

While the active working season on the farm will have a little let-up, the farmer can have a moment to spare to ascertain of what value his brood mares have been.

He will remember, in the first place that they have each given birth this season and have raised to weaning age a nice promising colt that bids fair to develop into a good saleable horse later on.

These youngsters are increasing in value and as they are yearlings now will help to make their living next season as two year olds. The brood mares have also done much farm and road work.

Probably I make a mistake in crediting each mare with a colt every year; so it is safer to say that counting for accidents a mare should average two colts every three years.

It would be rather a hard matter to say just what product she will give her owner each year of her working and breeding life. So much depends on her quality and especially upon her capacity as a sure breeder and likewise as a good mother.

Mares, like cows, differ greatly in their flow of milk and many times a medium-sized animal with heavy milk-flow capacity will raise a bigger and better colt than a much larger animal whose milk flow is insufficient.

The practical horse breeder and the farmer of experience is well aware of these facts and one will often be surprised to see farmers keep breeding mares that to their uninitiated appear to be indifferent specimens.

Say that a farmer has bought a mare in January for $150. She is five years old and he breeds her in March. The stud fee is $25, but the money is not due unless the mare proves to be in foal.

The colt has cost $25 at birth and at weaning time, four months later, he should be worth, if a good individual and a good grade, say $40.

By next spring he should be worth $75 and at two years old should bring $100 to $125. Now he can be put to work.

From then until he is four years old he should earn his feed—say $75 a year—and give a profit of $25 per year, although $50 would be nearer the mark.

At four years of age he should be worth $200, judging from the way well-bred, well-broken and well-kept horses are now selling.

We will say that a breeder is lucky enough to have raised a pair of four-years-olds, sound, good lookers, hearty, with snap and style, weighing from 1,200 to 1,400 pounds each, for the pair $400 can easily be had in any of the big markets.

These are not fanciful figures, but are based upon actual experience of every-day farmers of breeding, raising and selling colts.

Every farmer should, if possible, keep one or more good brood mares; not broken winded, worn out, city hacks, but sound, well-shaped, well-bred animals that possess individual merit, and whose progeny will sell readily when the dealer comes along.

Any breeder of experience knows well that almost as much depends on the brood-mare as on the stallion in the raising of any breed of good horses.

Many colts take their conformation from their mother, especially from their shoulders back. For instance, if a mare has wide, ragged hips, her colts are most liable to inherit this tendency. Many colts also inherit their dispositions from their dams.

Brood-mares should be sound, of quiet disposition, strongly built, and they should be well cared for.

It is a severe loss to the farmer who pays $25 stud fee, loses two or three months' work of his mare, and then loses a colt at birth or afterward, and all from neglect of some sort.

The mare can be worked up to a week or two before the colt is dropped. In fact, she is better off for the regular exercise, but she should be handled by a careful man, who will not excite her, and she should have a roomy box stall for her sleeping quarters.

Although many may disagree with me, I am firmly convinced from nearly 30 years' experience on breeding farms, that it is a risky business purchasing aged mares, who have spent the best years of their life doing work in the cities, and trying to make brood mares of them.

Even if they are only eight or ten years old, it is an expensive experiment. The reason is obvious.

In the first place when a mare has arrived at that age, and has never had a colt, her chances of getting in foal are lessened each year.

Furthermore, it is safe to say that a reasonable proportion of these mares have slunked their colts, and for this reason they have been sent from the farms and sold in the cities, where they can do excellent work.

In choosing brood-mares, always buy young ones, say from three to five years old, then you should be able to count on all of them getting in foal or certainly nearly every one, when, if you pick up a lot of second hand mares, of uncertain age, your percentage of colts will be extremely uncertain.

One good, sound young mare, bought from some reliable farmer or breeder, is worth more for breeding purposes than half a dozen so-called bargains picked up in the city.—C.M.C.

PRESIDENT SUSPENDER

NONE SO EASY

The Planter's Daughter;

Or, The Queen of Belle River.

Rosalie seated herself by the window, and looked out upon the new country. From the river, and from the grove that crowned the bluff the country stretched out—a high, level, and limitless prairie, broken, at wide intervals, by groves similar to that which surrounded S——, and relieved by countless millions of wild flowers.

"What is that splendid scarlet flower that grows so tall, and is as abundant on the prairie as clover in our own fields?" inquired Rosalie.

"I reckon you are talking about the prairie pink; but I haven't much time, myself, to take notice of flowers—'specially wild weeds," replied the landlady.

"Are you not a Marylander?" asked Rosalie.

"Yes," said the woman. "How did you know?"

"By your speech."

Just at this moment the cry of a child commenced in an adjoining room, and continued during the whole of the hostess' morning work. She set aside the table, and began to sweep the room, raising a great dust from the dried and pulverized mud left by the bachelors' shoes. Rosalie thoughtlessly threw her pocket-handkerchief over her head, to protect her hair from the dust—thoughtlessly, for else she might have guessed it would displease the touchy pride of the hard-working pioneer woman.

"You don't like the dust—maybe you never saw a broom?" she asked, looking somewhat contemptuously at the young lady's delicate person.

"Oh, yes, I have," said Rosalie, gently, "and used a broom, too; but I always sprinkle the floor, and tie a handkerchief over my head before sweeping."

"Ans. what do you take all that trouble for?"

"Because I dislike the dust to settle on my hair.

"Ha! ha! ha! You'll get out of that if you settle in these parts," resuming, her broom, and continuing her sweeping to its completion. Rosalie got up and lifted the babe, and took him to the window where she sat down with him, and soon soothed his tempers. The over-worked mother looked pleased, the hostess going to the door, and rapping, and calling out:

"John! Yes, John!"

The landlord, her "man," obeyed the summons. She met him with a sharp rebuke; he knew the bachelors would be home to dinner at twelve. And pushing the broom into his hand she made him make haste to the well. And soon the process of dinner-cooking was commenced.

When dinner was ready, the sound of the horn summoned the same company, who entered first an adjoining shed, where they all washed their faces and hands, using the same tin basin and the same crash towel, and then gathered round the table. Mark Sutherland returned from his morning's ramble, and took his seat among them.

"How have you prospered in your enterprise to-day, Mark?" asked Rosalie, as they left the table.

"I have got through all I wished, except one thing."

"And that?"

"To have not been able to rent a house. I shall have to leave you again to renew my search. And I am afraid you find the time hangs very heavily."

"Not at all, Mark. I have been occupied and interested."

The landlady rattled and clattered the dishes, until she had cleared away the dinner-service. And then, after wiping and putting away the tub, and pan, and mop, and doing numberless other "last jobs," she finally cleared her own face and hands, put on a clean apron, and sat down to nurse her baby and talk to Rosalie. By this time the afternoon was far spent, that the poor woman had not rested half an hour before it was time to prepare supper for her family and her boarders, who would be back at six.

Rosalie was sympathetically fatigued only to witness her labors, and she could not refrain from saying, as she once more took charge of the fretful, teething child: "Indeed, you have a great deal to do. I do not know how you have strength to go through so much."

And again the horn sounded, and the company gathered; but this time Mark Sutherland did not appear during the whole course of the meal—no, nor after it was over.

The table was cleared away, the room once more put in order, the candles lighted for the evening, and the men gathered in the kitchen, with their pipes, but still Mark did not come.

At last the landlady arose, and put her child to bed, and asked Rosalie if she should not like to be shown to her sleeping room.

Rosalie replied in the affirmative; and the hostess lighted a candle and conducted her through the middle passage, and up the stairs and opened a door to the right of the landing, leading into a large room, unplastered, and nearly unfurnished. The room was divided in the middle by a temporary partition of hanging blankets. On the first division there were two double beds covered with coarse patch-work quilts. The hostess passed between these, and, putting aside the blankets, led her guest to the interior division, which was smaller, and contained only one bed, covered like the others.

"You are to sleep here. Is there anything you want?" she asked, setting down the candle on a chest that served as toilet-table and washstand.

"Yes, water and towels, if you please."

"I'll get them for you. When do you look for him?"

"Mr. Sutherland?—every moment!"

"Now, tell me the truth—I shan't blame you—ain't you and that young man a runaway match?"

"Why, no," said Rosalie, laughing. "We were married in my uncle's house, and left it with his blessing and good wishes."

"That's right, but you somehow looked so young and delicate for such a life as you're come to, that I couldn't help thinking that it must o' been a love-match."

Rosalie did not say that she knew it was a love-match, and the landlady departed on her errand.

When she entered, bringing a tin basin and a crash towel, she put them down upon the chest, and said:

"I forgot to tell you that there are four bachelors sleep in the fore part of the room."

Rosalie looked up, surprised and shocked.

"Oh, they're very nice, steady young men; they won't make a noise, and won't you awake."

"But have you no private room unoccupied? Your house seems large; I should think there were at least four chambers on this floor?"

"Lor' bless you, child, so there are; but the floors ain't laid to none on them except this one, which is the reason I have to put so many in it. Bless you, you mustn't mind such mind such things out here——"

"Good night!" said the hostess.

Rosalie did not wish to sleep. She drew the chest to the only window in her part of the room, and sat down, and opened it and looked out upon the dark green prairie, that seemed to roll out like the ocean to meet the eastern horizon, where the harvest moon was just rising. Tears—but not of sadness—rushed to her eyes. And then she thought of the vicissitudes of the last two years, and especially of the last two months; of her life of almost oriental luxury in the valley of the Belle. She was happy, if ever young wife was so. She looked upon the prairie, bathed in the silvery splendor of moonlight, with its mystic boundaries lost under the horizon, and its vastness and vagueness cast a glamour over her imagination, and charmed her with the fancy of wandering on and on in quest of its unknown limits, or as far as the vanishing boundaries might entice her. In the midst of the pleasing reveries sleep surprised her, and her fair head sank upon her folded hands on the window-sill.

She was awakened by a gentle clasp around her waist and a gentle voice in her ear, saying:

"My Rosalie—asleep at the window, with the night dews falling on your head!"

She started and exclaimed, "Oh, Mark, is it you? I am so glad that you have come!"

He let down the window, and placed his hand upon her head to see if it was damp, and asked:

"Why did you not go to rest, Rosalie?"

"Why, at first I was not sleepy, and I heard that there were strangers in the next room—no, rather, on the other side of the blankets—and it seemed so odd."

He answered with a laugh, as he looked round:

"Yes, it is rather a rude place for the first and best hotel in the city of Shelton. But in a year or two you shall see this house well and completely finished and the rooms all comfortably fitted up and furnished; and in half a dozen years the host will probably have made his fortune."

"Well, Mark, and what success have you had?"

"The best success. I have found a house, which I think will suit us exactly. Come to the window for a moment again. Do you see, immediately under the moon, that distant grove, that looks as if it were just up straight and dark against the sky?"

"Yes, I see it."

"That is Wolf's Grove. It is not more than three miles from here. I can easily walk the distance twice a day. There is one building on the spot—a large log cabin, that was put up for a meeting-house. The cabin is in good repair, and I have already engaged it. So, dear wife, we have only to wait for the arrival of our little furniture, to go to housekeeping."

CHAPTER XX.

"Judge! your plunder's come—landed from the Sachem this morning!" were the words with which the landlord greeted Mark Sutherland, as the latter, with Rosalie, descended to breakfast.

"Judge!" echoed Rosalie, looking inquiringly from one to the other.

Mark Sutherland, and when their host had moved off in another direction, said:

"Nonsense, Rose. Yes, it was I whom he addressed as Judge. Every one gets an honorary title of distinction here. I don't know what it is given for; certainly not to confer honor, but rather, for the sake of civil brevity, as it is easier to say 'Judge' than 'Mr. Thompson.' Now, if I had ever belonged to any military company—if only as private in militia, they'd dub me here 'Cap'n,' if not 'Major,' or 'Gen'l;' and if I were county constable, instead of law student, they must still call me 'Judge.'"

And just then, as if in illustration of Mr. Sutherland's words, several men entered, eagerly inquiring for "the Colonel," meaning the landlord. And when the host came forward to know their will, several, speaking equally together, exclaimed:

"Colonel, we want your guns, and your dogs, and your company, this morning, to hunt a pack of wolves that chased Jones' boy almost into the village!"

"A pack of wolves!" exclaimed the boarders, gathering around.

"Jones' boy!" ejaculated the landlord, in amazement.

"Sitting from McPherson's mill!"

"Foremost one hung upon the horse's flank!"

"Wounded!"

"Nothing but the animal's speed saved him!"

"Wet with sweat!"

"Miraculous escape!"

"As to my guns and dogs, you can have them in welcome, but as to my company, I have promised the Judge here to drive him and his wife over to see their house. And I expect they will want me to haul the plunder over too—won't you, Judge?"

Mark Sutherland bowed.

After a little discussion, they urged "the Judge" to join their hunt, and Rosalie privately squeezed Mark's arm in disappointment. Mark declined. The visitors at length departed, with three or four of the bachelor boarders.

"I did not know," said Mr. Sutherland, "that the wild denizens of the forest ever ventured so near the settlements."

"No more they don't," replied the host; "only the Injuns have been hunting of 'em and drive 'em close on to the village. We'll git shut of 'em again after a bit."

When breakfast was over, "the Consul" geared up the carryall to take his young guests across the prairie. It was a fresh, bright morning when they set out, and the prairie still glistened with dew. There was no road to Wolf's Grove: but the driver took a bee-line over the level ground.

"It looks strange to me," said Rosalie, "to see these glorious flowers—which, if they were in our Eastern gardens, we should cherish with so much care—driven down and crushed by thousands under our wheels."

"It is but the sign of the fall of the forest before the march of immigration," observed Mark.

It reminds me of the triumphal entries of the conquerors of ancient times, whose chariot wheels passed ruthlessly over the dead and the dying."

Mark smiled at her fancy, and the driver took his pipe out of his mouth, and turned and looked at her.

"But, Rose, when you look at the countless millions of flowers left blooming—when you think of the countless millions of trees left standing—does it not give you an exultant sense of the exhaustless wealth of our prairies and forests?"

"I know something inspires me with unlimited hope just now. There is, certainly, as far as the comforts and elegances of civilized life are concerned, a look of great privation in the village and among the people we have just left. But certainly to me there is about this country an air of youth,-vigor, hope, unlimited, indescribable. I feel its influence, without being able to explain it."

Her Achievement.

"Now you've achieved something!" he exclaimed enthusiastically. "These are exactly like the cakes mother used to make. How did you do it?"

"I'll give you the recipe," replied the wife coldly. "I used margarine instead of butter, eggs a week old, I put alum in the flour, and added plenty of water to the milk."

JOFFRE'S PEOPLE AGGRIEVED.

Native Village Thinks Commander Has Deserted Them.

Rivesaltes, France, the town that gave birth to the Commander-in-Chief of the French armies, is pouting. The blinds of Joffre's house have been closed more than a year and the patient woodpecker has had to pierce them in so many places they look as if a machine-gun had been operating there. The villagers no longer point the place out to visitors. All because Joffre has not taken the time to go home to receive the address of felicitations of his neighbors and the present bought for him by popular subscriptions. The General-in-Chief is for the moment blacklisted and will have to exercise some of his finest strategy after the war to lift the penalty of his neglect.

The ill-humor of Rivesaltes is aggravated by a total lack of "sous" and a big deficit in wine. The absence of small change is attributed to the German raid on all forms of copper, and this, too, falls on Joffre, who ought to have been able to prevent it. For the shortage of the vintage of 1915 there is the more logical reason of mildew.

There is less song and laughter in all the towns of the south, for the Midi has found something in the war that it is bound to take seriously. All Perpignan salutes gravely when the Belgian band, recruited from the refugees of Flanders, marches by playing the "Brabanconne," but the boisterous cheers of other days are absent. Every day the Place de la Loge is crowded in front of the bulletin board of the Sporting Club, where is posted the latest news from the champion football players of France, with friends anxious to see what name has been added to the already long list of those who had fallen on the field of battle.

Toulouse is quite as grave as Perpignan, though more busy making powder, cartridges and bombs.

Toulouse is interesting also for the mystery that surrounds one of the old brick mansions where Bachelier carved coats of arms in 1533. With fixed bayonets, night and day, the Territorials defend the entrance to this house. The excitement in the early fall last year that the Bank of France had transferred its gold reserves there. When the bank returned to Paris, however, the Territorials continued their guard. Their mission is still a mystery to the public in general, but the initiated assert confidentially that Leonard da Vinci's "Mona Lisa," removed from the Louvre when danger threatened Paris, is in safekeeping there in an inviolable steel case.

Cats for Food in Hungary.

The Paris Figaro quotes the Budapest correspondent of the Frankfurter Zeitung as follows: "The official extent of land devoted to the cultivation of the Central Hungarian slaughter houses, states that in the Biharkenaztieser district, where all the Italian residents of Hungary are interned, a great number of cats are killed and dressed daily. The demand has been such that the price of cats rose to a prohibitive figure, hence the local authorities stepped in and fixed the maximum price at three crowns the kilo." (About 25 cents a pound).

The Safety-First Critic.

"Brown is a very careful critic, isn't he?"

"In what way?"

"He always manages to take the sting out of his unfavorable comment."

"For instance?"

"His bride made him a shortcake the other day, and when she asked him how he liked it he replied: 'It isn't as good as your mother used to make.'"

LOOKING OLD TOO SOON

The Condition of Too Many Women and Too Many Girls.

Too many woman and too many girls look old long before they should. Their faces become pale and drawn; wrinkles appear and their eyes lack brightness. Can this be wondered at when they so frequently have headaches, backaches and a general feeling of wretchedness and weakness? In most cases it is the blood that is to blame. From one cause or another the blood has become thin and watery, and it is a fact that anaemia (bloodlessness) more than any other cause, gives women this prematurely aged appearance. It is important that the blood supply of girls and women be regularly replenished—important not only on the score of looks, but to restore robust health, which is of greater value. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make new blood and restore the system shattered by overwork or worry. These pills give a glow of health to pale faces and make tired, weary women and girls feel bright and happy. With Dr. Williams' Pink Pills at hand there is no need for any woman or any girl to look ill or feel ill. Mrs. J. McDonald, jr., Hay, Ont., says: "I honestly believe Dr. Williams' Pink Pills saved my life. Some years ago I had anaemia, and as I did not realize the seriousness of the trouble I soon became a complete wreck. I got so weak I could hardly walk. I neither ate nor slept well, and could not go upstairs without stopping to rest. At times I had an almost unbearable pain in my back and would have to remain in bed. I suffered almost constantly from a dull headache, and when sweeping if I would stoop to pick up anything I would get so dizzy that I would have to catch hold of something to keep from falling. At times my heart would beat so fast that I would have a smothering sensation. My eyes were sunken and my hands and limbs would be swollen in the mornings. I tried several kinds of medicine without benefit and my friends thought I would not recover. Then I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and before long could see and feel that they were helping me. I gladly continued the use of the pills until I was completely cured and I cannot say enough in their praise, and I strongly recommend them to all run-down girls and women."

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills from any dealer in medicines or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

QUENCH THIRST BY STRATEGY.

A General Can't Get Liquor in Paris Cafes, But Wife Can.

Gen. Galliени's order against alcohol being served to military men has caused many an amusing scene in the Paris restaurants. In the provinces the order is not so strictly observed. An official definition as to what constitutes alcohol has been given, by which it appears that men in uniform are entitled to drink any natural wine or any liquor not more than 15 degrees strong. This bars even vermouths and quinquinas, all of which contain more than 15 degrees, in fact, it leaves no "aperitif" that is considered worth drinking.

British Generals have been refused whiskey and soda at dinner, much to their indignation, and, when as often happens, their French is not sufficient to enable them to understand the reason, the other diners have had some fun out of the incidents. At many a restaurant when the coffee stage was reached it could be noted that officers seemed to be taking two cups at once. One contained a liqueur. Some restaurant keepers close their eyes when an officer orders a soft drink for himself and alcohol for his wife, and each drinks from the other's glass. Other restaurants are more careful, explaining that such and such a place had been closed for two days for allowing such a dodge.

Men on leave from the front take the matter philosophically, some resentfully, some smilingly. At the front itself the rum ration has been suppressed except for the men in the first line trenches. A returned "poilu," when asked what was his chief souvenir of the campaign so far (he had been at the front all the time since August) said at once: "The funeral of the rum bottle. When the order suppressing the rum ration went into force we got an empty bottle and buried it with all the military honors we could arrange. We made wreaths for its grave and drew up a moving death card, announcing the death of a much-loved comrade, deeply regretted by all who knew him. They said the officers were much amused when they saw it." —

CHILDHOOD AILMENTS

Ailments such as constipation, colic, colds, vomiting, etc., seize children of all ages, and the mother should be on her guard against these troubles by keeping a box of Baby's Own Tablets in the house. If any of these troubles come on suddenly the tablets will cure them, or if the little one is given an occasional dose of the tablets he will escape these troubles. The tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

SHOOTING FOR RAIN.

An Expert Says Cannonading Will Not Cause Rain.

At a recent meeting of the Royal Meteorological Society, Dr. H. R. Mill, director of the British Rainfall Organization, discredited the theory that the firing at the seat of war was the cause of the heavy rainfalls of last winter. Those who argue that cannonading causes rain assert that the concussion shakes the air and thus precipitates the moisture in the clouds. If that theory is correct, the precipitation should occur immediately and in the area within which the explosions shake up the air strata. As a matter of fact, the lack of rain in the western war area during the months of September, October, March and April was noticeable and unusual. In the same way, he said, people had attributed the exceptional wetness of the winter of 1903 to the general adoption of wireless telegraphy. The fact that the winter of 1873, which was long before the use of Hertzian waves, was notably wet, and that no year since 1903 has been nearly so wet, in spite of the enormous increase in radiotelegraphy, shows the inaccuracy of such an explanation.

JELLICOE'S COAL BILL.

Modern Battleship Uses Twenty Tons of Coal an Hour.

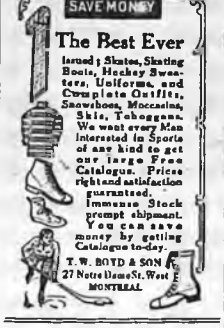
In 1913, under peace conditions, the Admiralty spent no less than $11,455,245 on fuel. What the bill for 1914 will be time alone will tell, but it will be many times greater than what it was in 1913. Every ship is in commission, every bunker is crammed with black diamonds, and, day and night, a full head of steam has to be maintained, ready at a moment's notice for the order "Full speed ahead."

The average modern battleship requires about twenty tons of coal an hour in order to maintain a full head of steam. And we have nearly seventy such ships at present in commission, says London Answers. A battle cruiser, such as the Lion, has engines of greater horse-power than the average battleship, and consequently requires more fuel.

When Sir David Beatty's squadron of five battle-cruisers paid their famous visit to the Heligoland Bight, they consumed between them nearly 5,000 tons of the best Welsh steam coal.

Considering their size, torpedo-boat destroyers are even bigger gluttons for coal than battle-cruisers. Our Navy must be burning over 100,000 tons in the course of a day. The German Navy, which is resting so comfortably in the Kiel Canal, is doubtless very much more economical.



The British taxpayer can therefore look forward to being presented with the biggest coal bill the world has ever known. He can also look forward to going short of coal himself.

Germany used to be our best customer for coal, but the Navy is more than making up for any custom we have lost through the war.

Stocks are getting low and prices are going up and up. But we shall have one consolation as we sit by our empty grates. We may shiver, but Jellicoe is getting all the coal he needs. And a battleship without sufficient coal is of no more use than so much scrap-iron.

ZINC IN WAR TIME.

A Constituent of Cartridge Brass and Shell Fuses.

Zinc is so essential in war that it has risen enormously in price in the past year. Costing originally only two-fifths as much as copper, it now costs decidedly more than copper, in spite of the fact that copper itself has sharply increased in value. Zinc is a constituent of cartridge brass and shell fuses, and is used also as a covering for iron barbed-wire fencing. In 1913 the United States, Germany, and Belgium were the leading producers of zinc. Of the three, only the United States smelted domestic ores. Belgium and Germany relied mainly on zinc concentrates that they imported from the Broken Hill mines in New South Wales, where, for one reason and another, it does not pay to do the smelting. France, Spain, and Great Britain also produce substantial quantities, but not enough to supply their own needs. Austria and Germany have considerable deposits of ore in Silesia, Hungary, Carinthia, and the Tirol. As the zinc-smelting furnaces of Great Britain are not well adapted for dealing with the Broken Hill concentrates, it buys the bulk of its supplies from the United States.

NEW WAY OF FIGHTING FLIES.

A Farmer Gives an Easily Applied Preventative.

Farmers whose barns and outhouses are infested by flies in the summer season may be interested in learning how to banish the pests. According to the Bloemfontein (South African) Friend, a farmer who had many cows housed in different sheds saw, without being able to prevent it, the annoyance to which the animals were subjected. He happened, however, to observe that one shed, the walls of which were of a somewhat bluish tint, was free from flies, and the cows were unworried by their attacks. Thereupon he added a bit of blue color to the lime with which he covered the walls of his sheds, and from that moment the flies deserted the premises.

The following is the formula he used in providing this effective specific against flies: To twenty gallons of water add ten pounds of slaked lime and one pound of ultramarine. The wash should be applied twice during the summer.

MOTHER'S "NOTIONS"

Good for Young People to Follow.

"My little grandson often comes up to show me how large the muscles of his arms are.

"He was a delicate child, but has developed into a strong, healthy boy, and Postum has been the principal factor.

"I was induced to give him the Postum because of my own experience with it.

"I am sixty years old, and have been a victim of nervous dyspepsia for many years. Have tried all sorts of medicines and had treatment from many physicians, but no permanent relief came.

"I used to read the Postum advertisements in our paper. At first I gave but little attention to them, but finally something in one of the advertisements made me conclude to try Postum.

"I was very particular to have it prepared strictly according to directions, and used good, rich cream. It was very nice indeed, and about bedtime I said to the members of the family that I believed I felt better. One of them laughed and said, 'That's another of mother's notions,' but the notion has not left me yet.

"I continued to improve right along after leaving off tea and coffee and taking Postum, and now after three years' use I feel so well that I am almost young again. I know Postum was the cause of the change in my health and I cannot say too much in its favor. I wish I could persuade all nervous people to use it."

Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

Postum comes in two forms:

Instant Postum—a soluble powder —dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

Painful Swellings Reduced Muscular Strains Ended

Such Troubles Now Quickly Rubbed Away by Powerful Remedy.

If you have any muscles that are strained and weak, that are frequently subject to rheumatic pains; if you have any painful swellings that refuse to go away—get busy with Nerviline. This is the very sort of trouble that Nerviline is noted for curing quickly. "I have proved Nerviline simply a wonder in reducing a hard, painful swelling. It followed an injury I received in my left leg and caused me great pain and discomfort. The muscles were strained and sore, and no other remedy gave the ease and comfort I got from rubbing on Nerviline. There is a soothing, pain-relieving power about Nerviline that touched the root of my trouble. Nerviline reduced the swelling, it destroyed the pain, it brought my limb back to perfect condition."—The experience of Mr. Bowen, whose home is in Middlesex, is not unusual. Thousands are proving every day that muscular pains of every kind, chronic rheumatism, lumbago, neuralgia and sciatica will yield to Nerviline when nothing else can possibly cure. Nerviline an old-time family pain remedy, used nearly forty years with great success. The large family size bottle costs 50c., trial size 25c. at all dealers.

THE GREAT SEAL.

A More Elaborate Article Than Most People Imagine.

The Great Seal of England that Lord Haldane handed to the King when he resigned the Lord Chancellorship is, says the London Chronicle, a more elaborate article than most people imagine. It costs about $3,500 to make it, and it consists of two heavy silver plates, in one of which is cut the die for the front of the seal, and in the other, that for the back. When the seal is to be affixed to a document, a lump of wax is softened in hot water and cooled in cold water, after which it is placed between the two plates and pressed. It comes out in the shape of a disk, with an impression on each side.

Formerly there was an official attached to the seal who was quite as proud of his office as the Lord Chancellor was of his. That was "Chaffwax," whose sole business was to melt the wax and to take the impressions of the Great Seal as often as required. The writer remembers the last of the "Chaffwaxes," a rosy-cheeked old gentleman who lived long to enjoy the pension that a grateful country granted him for his important services. Those services are now performed by an unnamed subordinate in the chancellor's office.

Now that vodka has been abolished, the Russians are taking to tea with great favor. Russian agents are buying great quantities of tea in the East, thus forcing up the price of the product.

A Violated Agreement.

"I don't like to find fault, Mr. Landlord," said Dixie Ipsit, addressing the proprietor of the Ocean View House, "but didn't I understand that our arrangement was that all bills were to be presented weekly?"

"Undoubtedly, sir," replied the landlord.

"Well, I thank you had better notify your mosquitoes of the fact, sir," said Dixie. "About 10,000 of them are presenting their bills nightly."

The Warm Bath.

Smytha's mistake, which is described in an English contemporary, must have been disconcerting, to say the least.

"You'll find your bath in the out-'ouse."

Thus he had been directed the night before at the little inn where he was stopping, and that is why he was now, in his dressing gown, pushing open the outhouse door. It was dark, but there was the tub, and it would do. He hopped in. In the middle of his ablutions the red-faced landlord thrust his head in at the door. In the dim light he failed to see the man in the tup.

"Water quite nicely warm, thanks," observed Smythe, "but it's a trifle muddy."

"Muddy be hanged!" roared the landlord, bursting in suddenly. "Your tub's in the next place. Git out of it, you blitherin' idiot! Not a word of this in the 'ouse, mind! not a word of this in the 'ouse! That's my 'omebrewed ale you're a-washin' in!"

The more talk it takes to run things the slower they move.

NUMBER 23 THE PROPRIETORS

BRITAIN'S DREADNOUGHTS.

Numbers More Effective in Sea Than Land Fights.

The question of numerical superiority is of extremely great importance in naval fights—much greater than in land battles, says the World's Work. Ashore a weaker force, by intrenching and using obstacles, can stand off a much stronger one; for example, the German army in France has probably been outnumbered more than two to one during the recent extraordinary operations, yet the allied troops have been unable to make very much headway against the strongly intrenched line.

But on the water the "terrain" offers no protection, and, in consequence, it is mathematically demonstrable that, assuming equality of units, the "strength" of two opposing fleets varies as the "square" of the numbers of ships.

The great value of initial numerical superiority is evident; if England's 45 dreadnoughts can bring to action Germany's 26, the preponderance of strength of the larger fleet (assuming equal units) will lie in the ratio of 2025 to 676—that is to say, England's superiority will be actually more than three to one, instead of less than two to one, as seems at first evident from the numerical proportions.

To Raise Telegraph Rates.

Along with the rise in the price of nearly everything else, the telegraph rate in Great Britain will probably soon be raised. It is reported that the postal authorities — the telegraph lines are the Government-controlled in Great Britain—are considering increasing, from 12 to 18 cents, the rate for sending a 12-word message, address and signature to be counted as words as heretofore. The 12-cent rate has been in force 30 years.

IT'S A GOD-SEND TO HUMANITY

is what a leading physician says of Dr. Jackson's Roman Meal. Properly cooked into porridge according to directions on package, without stirring after first making, it is a delight to humanity. Use a double boiler or set boiler in basin of boiling water and use one cup meal to two cups water. Cook for half an hour. It's very nutritious, prevents indigestion and relieves constipation or "money back." Ask your doctor. At grocers', 10 and 25 cents.

The Runaway.

In spite of scoldings, Helen persisted in running away from home. One day, after a longer absence than usual, her mother asked, "Helen, dear, does not your conscience trouble you?" explaining that her conscience was a little voice speaking within.

Helen answered: "Oh, yes, mamma; that little voice is always saying: 'Run faster, faster, Helen; your mother is after you!'"

The Silver Lining.

War does not make all men bloodthirsty. On the banks of the Yser in Belgium where there has been such fierce fighting, the ambulance men one day found a young German badly wounded; and in the midst of the bursting shells they stopped to scribble a line describing what they had seen and heard, and pinned it on the blanket that enveloped him.

When he reached the improvised hospital, the nurses read the blood-stained sheet of packing paper, and one or two brushed away tears as they did so. It bore these words: "He saved the lives of seven British soldiers." It is good to know that, tenderly cared for by an English doctor, he eventually recovered.

PAISLEY. NOV. 3rd, 1915

ABOUT SERVIA

The centre of battle strife in Europe during the past two or three weeks is Servia. The desperately brave and heroic fight of her soldiery against the Austro-German-Bulgar invasion has brought this little kingdom as much into the forefront as Belgium was at the beginning of the war. We are much less acquainted with Servia than with our little western allies, as there was very little commercial intercourse between the Serbians and Canada. In the year ending March 31st, 1915, goods amounting to the value of $8 were sent from Canada to Servia, and $150 worth of exports came into the Dominion from that kingdom. What goods were dealt in to make up these light statistics, THE ADVOCATE cannot discover in the blue books.

Historical information shows that Servia is an independent kingdom of Europe, which was anciently a part of Moesia under the Romans, and more recently a part of Turkish dominions. In 1815, however, it gained freedom and self-government as the outcome of a successful war, after being under Turkish rule from 1389, A.D.

The area of the country is 19,050 square miles. Its surface has a general slope towards the north, and is on the whole mountainous, being traversed by ramifications of three mountain chains, the summits of which seldom exceed 3,000 feet. The climate is somewhat rigorous in the north, but very mild in the valleys and plains. Vegetation is vigorous. The mountains are covered with forests of excellent timber, walnut being very conspicuous among the trees. The soil is fertile, producing fruits, plums in particular, and cereals, flax, hemp and tobacco and wine, also cattle, sheep and pigs are raised in large numbers. Of minerals there are copper, lead, iron and coal. Manufacturing industries can scarcely be said to exist. The chief exports are dried plums (prunes) and live stock. There are 354 miles of railway and 2554 miles of telegraph lines.

The population by 1901 census was 2,493,770, but is now given at nearly 5,000,000. The Servians are Slavonic by race and the great majority adhere to the Greek Catholic faith. In 1891 there were 16,000 Mohammedins, 11,500 R. Catholics, 2,100 Protestants and 4,652 Jews.

The executive authority of the government is vested in the king, who is assisted by a council of eight members with special departments. There is also a National Assembly and Senate.

Some travellers from the American continent are giving us their impressions, after a visit to Servia. Her army of about half a million is termed a wonderful body of soldiers. "To-day there is no fighting man in the world more wonderful than the 'Tommy Atkins' of Servia," says one writer. "A splendid looking lot. Ragged and dirty and tousle-headed beyond description; but they are tall and well built, their shoulders square and their eyes clear," says another. After being riddled by shot and shell in the four years' war with Bulgaria, and ravaged by an epidemic of typhus, they were again ready to strike for liberty against the Germans. They are proving to be a hard nut to crack.

In their mode of living the Servian peasants are a thousand years behind the times, compared with Canada. The men have only two suits of clothes, one for winter and one for summer, and such is his pagan taste for filth, changes his clothes only twice a year. It is not surprising, therefore, that both the people and their habitations are as much infested with tiny insects as a Canadian lumber, mining or railroad camp of forty years ago. There are vermin, vermin everywhere.

Servia has no educational facilities. There were only 360 doctors in the land when the typhus epidemic started, and nearly half of those died from that disease. There is neither a medical college or a nurses' training school in all the land.

The public conveyances, outside of the few cities that have street cars and a few carriages of sorts, are bull carts and a curious kind of rickety covered wagon which looks like the misshapen offspring of our old prairie schooner. The bull carts have wide, creaking wooden wheels and rough bodies of hand-hewn planks. There are practically no highways or bridges, the roads generally being rock-bottomed water courses and medieval trails, and streams must be forded, so travelling is very toilsome and full of discomfort.

Servia is a nation of farmers, but there are no farms and farm houses as we know them. The people congregate in communistic villages, and have done so since the old patriarchal days, when it was necessary owing to dangers incident to intertribal strife and the general continuous insecurity of life and destructible property.

The magnificent tillage of the soil is a mystery to the casual observer, as every possible acre is cultivated. They work from dawn until the sun gets hot, and in the late evening, after our day's work is done. Throughout the hot hours of the day they lie in the shade and sleep. Home buildings and home furnishings are very primitive. The towns are unsanitary, with roughly paved streets. Some places of three or four thousand people are without a doctor or nurse.

"Servia needs medical missionaries—many of them, and needs to be shamed into the adoption of some standard of decent sanitation. Most of all, Servia needs peace and a man among her leaders capable of adding unto himself the name of Builder," says Eleanor Franklin in The Saturday Evening Post.

ANSWERING THE CALL

The crying need of the Empire for men and more men to take up arms for Britain and her allies is appealing to our own native-born young men of Paisley and vicinity as strongly as anywhere in the Dominion in proportion to population and the number of those available. Nearly every one who has enlisted from here is a son of the soil, with the indomitable pioneer spirit in his constitution. It couldn't be otherwise than that the sons and grandsons of those men and women who faced the difficulties and privations of the primeval conditions under which settlement of the "Queen's Bush" was begun, and the work of establishing a home therein was completed, should to-day feel the thrill of patriotism and go unfalteringly to the battle front, there to take a hand in the herculean labor which it is the privilege of the men of this generation to share, viz., to fight out and win the battle for liberty, not our liberty alone, but the liberty of mankind. These descendants of resourceful Bruce pioneers will make strong and resourceful soldiers, and by the steadfast performance of the their duties on the field or in the trenches, add to the glory that has already been won by Canadian volunteer fighting men in France.

LOCAL AND DISTRICT NEWS

Back to England

Mr. Chris. Airey, of 4th con. Bruce, left on Thursday last with his children for England, where his friends are living. Mr. Airey was well satisfied with his position as a farmer in Bruce, but after the death of his wife found it difficult to both farm and care for the little ones, so concluded to return to the Old Land. As he finds he is needed on the fighting line he is ready to take his place there as soon as possible.

From Shorncliffe

Pte. Wm. McGowan, of the 9th Res. Battalion, wrote on Oct. 24th, to Mrs Tooke, with whom he boarded while in Paisley. He says they are kept pretty busy in the camp there on musketry drill. "We are up every morning at 4.30, so you'll know we don't oversleep ourselves. But it aint too bad. We have a pretty good time, just the same. I haven't got a pass home yet, but expect it soon. I think it will be a happy time for me when I get home to visit."

Tuberculosis Days

Sunday, Nov. 14th, is to be observed in many churches in Ontario as tuberculosis day, when special sermons or lectures will be delivered by the ministers referring to the disease, its causes, symptoms, treatment and cure, suggesting ways of combatting it, and giving particulars of the great work done by the National Sanitarium Association. The Provincial Department of Education approves of the object aimed at by the Association, and recommends that on Monday, Nov. 15th, the subject be given attention by teachers in the schools, also pamphlets on "Tuberculosis, What It Is," be distributed for use in the schools.

Dr. Black Locates at Clifford

Finding the doctor he was to succeed near Hamilton not ready to move, Dr. Black changed his plans. With several locations open, he took some time to make a choice, and has decided to go to Clifford, where at present there is only one other practitioner. The editor of The Express, noting in last week's issue the probability of Dr. Black removing to there, said: "We will soon have quite a colony of "Paisley bodies" around us here. The families of Mr. R. Parker, Mr. D. McKenzie, teacher, ourselves, Mr. Foster, and now Dr. Black make up a nice aggregation of old Paisleyites occupying the pews in Knox Presbyterian Church."

A Soldier's "Dug-Out" in Belgium

Pte. Harold Tooke, in a letter to his mother dated Oct. 21st, says: "I must tell you about our dug-out. We have a dandy, that we just moved into last night. It is high enough to stand up in, about 12 feet long and 7 feet wide, with a good roof of logs, and sand bags on top of them for protection. It is just like a small cellar, only warmer and drier. We have a good fire-place built in the earth wall, and it makes the place very comfortable. We have good straw to sleep on. So you see, mother, we're fixed up great for a few days. The worst of it is, that when we get a place fixed up to suit our tastes we have to move out. You see we only stay in one place about six days. But such is life in small countries. Ha! Ha!!"

Five Paisley Boys Join the Artillery Corps

Six more young Paisley men who are willing to serve, suffer and even die for their native land, went to Toronto on Monday to enlist for overseas service. Five of these were accepted, viz.: Messrs. Jas. Patterson, John Hamilton, Wilmer Sparrow, Guy Purdy and Leslie Shaw. These men are all taken on the artillery corps, and will make a most efficient quota in that branch of the service. They came home on Tuesday night and will return to Toronto in a few days to begin their course of training.

Mitchell—Kippen

Last Wednesday afternoon a very quiet wedding occurred at the Baptist Manse, Hespeler, when Miss Minnie Hasseline Kippen, of Tiverton, became the wife of Mr. Arthur Lewis Mitchell, of Paisley. The bride who wore a blue travelling suit with hat to match, was given away by her brother, Mr. Alex. J. Kippen, of Tiverton, and her cousin, Mrs. E. J. Stobo, acted as matron-of-honor. Rev. Dr. Stobo performed the ceremony. After a dainty wedding dinner the newly married couple left for Toronto. They will reside in Paisley, or Rose St.

Cremated Remains Buried

The second interment of cremated remains was made in Paisley cemetery on Thursday of last week, when the ashes of Miss Sara M. Dick were placed in the family plot. The urn containing the ashes was brought up from Listowel by two cousins of deceased, Messrs. Scott. A few friends of deceased attended the burial service at the cemetery, which was conducted by Rev. Mr. Little. The deceased lady was the youngest daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Dick, of this town. She had been living on the Pacific coast for a number of years, and her death occurred at Passederra, Cal., on Oct. 15th.

Albemarle County Valuation Changed by Consent

Reeve Ballachey was in Walkerton on Saturday of last week, attending an emergency meeting of the County Council, or rather of as many members as could conveniently attend. It had to do with the assessment of Albemarle which was appealed against. The valuation over 100 per cent higher than it was in 1901, although it is claimed that the value has decreased on account of destruction of bush by wind and fire. The settlement arrived at on Monday reduces the valuation 40 per cent. This will, of course, mean a slight increase in county taxes elsewhere and it is especially provided that income and business assessment shall not be included this year. The courts have decided that the council had no power to change the valuation, but that the judge had, and the object of the session was to arrive at a consent judgment, which was done on the terms outlined above.

In Trench and Rest Camp

Our company are back in the reserve trenches for six days, after which our whole battalion go back to the rest camp as divisional reserves, for another six days. That is the general routine now. It isn't too bad, either, although I would rather be in the first line of trenches. Where we are now is nothing more nor less than fatigue work from morning till night, fixing up trenches and supplying the engineers with material for repair and construction work. I said from morning till night, but sometimes it is from night till morning, for we often have to go to certain parts of the trenches under cover of darkness, certain exposed sections. The other night I was in charge of a party of men carrying material to the trenches when Fritz began to toss over whiz bangs. They are called that because they come so suddenly that you scarcely have time to duck after hearing the report, till they burst. They are shrapnel shells and sweep the ground for about 300 yards in front with small bullets and pieces of the shell itself. The first shell burst about 100 yards in front of us. You should have seen us get under cover. Some manoeuvring, I can tell you. I got behind a big tree and lay flat. Two more shells came in rapid succession and some of the shrapnel hit the tree. Was very thankful the tree was in front of me. They only shot three in our direction, and then we went on our way. I am writing this in my dug-out, and just now can hear the Germans guns firing on a British aeroplane on observation flight. We are situated along a roadway that runs up within a short distance of the first line of trenches. Our dug-outs are along the sides of the road in the bank. The road runs through a deep cut just here. My hut is about 10 ft. by 8 ft. and about 4 ft. high, and is roofed with corrugated iron and sacks filled with sand on top of that. There is a nice little open fireplace on which I do my cooking. We sometimes get our larder replenished at the farm houses. It is quite a treat to get potatoes, meat and eggs. It is rather quiet here this afternoon. I think there is something brewing. All I can hear is an odd anti-craft gun and then an odd shell or two. Probably towards evening there will be something doing. I am enclosing some flowers which I picked while visiting the ruins of an old Belgian monastery which has been shot to pieces by the Germans. They throw shells at it every day or so, and had done so about two hours before my visit there. While looking around I found an unexploded German shell. It was two feet long and seven inches in diameter, weighed about 200 pounds. Bright and fresh from Germany. The feet of the boys are fine. Have seen our boys in action and am very well pleased with the way they control themselves under fire. They are a bunch to be proud of as representatives of Canada. They are anxious to get into a bayonet charge with the Germans. Well, I must conclude for this time. Hope everybody is fine. With love to all.

The Dry Forces in Big Drive

44 Municipalities Will Vote Upon Local Option By-laws

More than one-seventh of all municipalities in Ontario that remain under license are being attacked by the temperance forces. Voting will take place at the next municipal elections. The present situation in the province is, that of the 847 municipalities 556 are already dry. Of the 291 remaining under license 44 vote upon Local Option in January next. Involved in these campaigns and in the license reduction campaign in Ottawa city are more than one-sixth of all the licenses in the province.

Already the Dominion Alliance office in Toronto, which is directing this big campaign, is a scene of great activity, and those in charge are confidently looking forward to a sweeping victory at the polls when voting day comes.

During the past five years 151 municipalities have gone dry, and during the same five years only one municipality has gone back to license. The general secretary of the Alliance likens the campaign in Ontario to that of the Allies in France and Flanders. "We make a drive and dig in," said he, "and we always hold the ground we gain." To-day the temperance forces are in better position than ever for the coming fight, and unless all signs fail, will win another big victory.

The places voting include 8 cities, 11 towns, 10 villages and 15 rural municipalities. In the city of Belleville the campaign is being pushed by the citizens' committee which is busily at work. Petitions are already more than sufficiently signed. The workers expect to have 40 per cent before they are completed. There are strong influences against Local Option, but on the other hand support is being received from unexpected quarters. The city was stirred a short time ago by the campaign of Dr. J. L. Gordon, which has had permanent good results.

Live young business men are leading the fight in Woodstock. The working of Local Option in Ingersoll has caused both manufacturers and employers of Woodstock, which is only ten miles from Ingersoll and which is connected by trolley, to be anxious to obtain the same results.

The citizens of Niagara-on-the-lake, having experienced several months under dry conditions, apparently want them continued, and are now energetically pushing a Local Option campaign.

Oshawa, a live manufacturing centre, is co-operating with the neighboring town of Whitby so that both will go dry together. Parry Sound, which is a large lumbering centre, and in the neighborhood of which are new and extensive explosives works, is also in line.

LICENSE REDUCTION—Ottawa.

A REMARKABLE PROPHECY

Many people with a gift for looking ahead foresaw the present European war. It didn't require extraordinary acumen to predict the great crash after the rise of the Triple Entente as a counterweight to the Triple Alliance. But a remarkable capacity for divination must be conceded to the prophet who way back in 1882 could set "1910 or thereabouts" as the date for a clash between Great Britain and Germany on the issue of world supremacy.

It was an extraordinary man who made this extraordinary prediction —Charles George Gordon, "Chinese" Gordon—an undoubted genius and one of the most picturesque and heroic figures in British military history. A letter by Gordon to Mr. James R. Purdy, dated 1882, has recently been published in The Morning Post, of London, from which the following is an extract: "Every Briton should think of the future of his country and cause each one to insist on the government passing a measure for compulsory universal military training! So far as Britain is concerned she need not, for the next quarter of a century, be under any apprehension of serious difficulties arising with any of her European neighbors but in 1910 or thereabout there will have risen a naval power which may prove mightier than she, and should she (Germany) gain the supremacy Britain will become extinct both as a sea and a land power, and all her dependencies, including India, will fall into Germany's clutches. You may live to see this, I shall not, but when the time comes remember my words."

In 1882 Germany was not a sea-power, had no colonies and had not been smitten by imperialistic ambitions. Bismarck was encouraging France to occupy more African territory and to dispute priority in that region with Great Britain. But Gordon looked far beyond the superficial friction of the hour between Great Britian and France, and had a true vision of Germany's role as the ultimate challenger of Britain's sea power and oversea pretensions. Gordon was part soldier, part statesman, part mystic. It has been granted to few humans to have his immense range of experience or to read the future as clearly as he did.

—The war on typhoid fever promises to eclipse the campaign still being actively conducted against tuberculosis. The United States Surgeon General has suggested the following appropriate funeral sermon to be delivered at the bier of a typhoid victim: "At any rate, the death of this young man could have been prevented! It was entirely unnecessary. It is the price which we are made to pay for somebody's ignorance and carelessness. The day is fast approaching when such sacrifice shall cease to be. It will arrive only when we have learned that the presence of typhoid in a community means that someone has been criminally negligent of his duty. To-day, with hearts bowed down by the grief of our loss, let us resolve that we will henceforth so order our lives that we may conduct them without menace to others."

DOESNT PAY TO JOKE

Lost You be Taken for a Pro-German

Kincardine Review: A man named Peter Bruss who has been working with Thomas Bushel near Bervie came into town last week and was staying with Gordon Skivenahl, a Russian, who works at Frank Sellery's as a shoemaker. He didn't stay long, because the two got into conversation about the war. Bruss said he hoped the Germans would soon get to Constantinople and come to Canada, too.

"What would you do if they came?" asked Gordon.

"I would hold up both hands for them," said Bruss.

That was more than Gordon could stand. He went down town and saw Chief Leithead. Bruss was arrested and appeared next day before Magistrate Quinn. He is rather illiterate, but said that he was born in Russia but raised in Austria. He declares himself a loyal Canadian and says he was only joking when he talked as he did to Gordon.

The magistrate commandeered $60 of Bruss' money and remanded him. In the meantime he got into communication with Thomas Bushel who vouches for him as a good, honest fellow. The magistrate then allowed him to leave but kept his $60 as a hostage for his good behavior. He is working for Walter Knake, but must report on every fortnight to the authorities.

FOOD FOR THE BRAIN

Feed Brain by Supplying Nerves, is Latest Idea

A great deal has been said about the value of certain articles as brain food, and one of the pet theories of popular physiology has been that fish and other substances composed largely of phosphorus are the most appropriate diet for brain workers. But modern science is emphasizing that the best food for the brain is that which nourishes the whole body, with special reference to the nerves.

Brain power is largely an expression through the nerves of bodily vitality. In discussing this point in a recent treatise, Dr. George M. Beard says that the diet of brain workers should be of large variety, delicately served, abundantly nutritious, of which fresh meat should be a prominent constituent.

In vacations or whenever it is desired to rest the brain, fish may, to a certain extent, take the place of meat. He says we should select those articles that are most agreeable to our individual tastes and so far as possible we should take our meal amid pleasant social surroundings.

In great crises that call for unusual exertion we should rest the stomach, that for the time the brain may work the harder, but the deficiency of nutrition ought always to be supplied in the first interval of repose.

Wouldn't Accept Commission

London Advertiser: Capt. H. Parker, of Paisley, railroad engineer on the Grand Trunk, who for a number of years held rank in the 32nd Bruce Regiment, and also a field officer's certificate, enlisted as a private at the Armories Saturday. He asked to be drafted to D company, 71st Battalion, now at Chatham. Capt. Parker endeavored to enlist with the Mounted Rifles, but that corps is already over strength. He was then advised to apply for a commission on an overseas force by the recruiting officers who stated that the country was in need of just such men, and that it was because the older and more experienced officers had not come forward in greater numbers that the Government had to accept so many young officers. Mr. Parker, however, had his own views on the matter, and returned to the Armories, insisting that he be taken on the strength of the 71st Battalion. "There are plenty of men looking for commissions," he said, "but give me the ranks every time." "Will you accept a commission in the 71st if it is offered to you?" queried a reporter. "No, I won't even take a stripe," he declared. "I want to go as a private and nothing else."

The People in Paisley and Vicinity want to Spend Money

MONEY is for use, not for hoarding. Most of us want what money will buy more than money, so we are always spending our money. Also, most of us do not make enough money to keep or hoard it—we must spend it on necessities.

Much Paisley money is spent with firms outside of this community—with the big city mail-order houses; money that ought to be spent at home.

More money would be spent in Paisley if more of our merchants would advertise, and if those who do advertise would advertise more.

To the People in and About Paisley

Spend your money in Paisley. Sending money out of this community makes the community poorer for you and everybody else. Building up outside businesses won't help you any.

Favor Goes to Those Who Woo It

The Housewife's Corner

New and Timely Dishes.

Sauted Fillets of Salmon.—Clean and pick a small salmon. Sprinkle small slices with salt and pepper. Saute in a hot blazer, using enough butter to prevent burning. Season with lemon juice and sprinkle with finely chopped parsley.

Cinnamon Bun Pudding.—Soak four rich, stale buns, unbroken, in cold water for 10 minutes. Press out water carefully, then add two beaten eggs and a pint of milk, stirring all together. Bake. Serve with milk, or any sauce. The buns usually have sufficient sugar, butter and spices.

Mutton Ragout. — Beat currant jelly that it may be easily measured. Put three tablespoonfuls jelly in hot blazer. Add one teaspoonful lemon juice and two tablespoonfuls butter. When butter is melted reheat thin slices of cold boiled mutton in saucepan. Season with salt and paprika.

Egg Balls for Soup.—Egg balls form a great improvement to a clear soup. Boil four eggs very hard, drop them into cold water, and when cool remove the yolks, pounding these in a mortar until quite a paste; then beat them with a teaspoonful of salt, a little pepper, and the white of one uncooked egg. Form into balls the size of a walnut, roll in flour, and fry a pale brown.

Beef Balls.—Cut one-half pound beef from top of round in one-third-inch strips and scrape with a rather dull knife. Remove all soft part of beef from freshly cut side. Turn and scrape other side. Season with salt and pepper and shape into small balls about the size of filberts, using as little pressure as possible. Drop balls into a hot blazer, generously sprinkled with salt, shaking pan constantly until the entire surface of the ball is seared. Serve on small pieces of buttered toast.

Oyster Bisque.—Two cupfuls white stock or milk, one cupful cream, one egg, two cupfuls oysters, one teaspoonful chopped parsley, two tablespoonfuls butter, blade of mace, salt, pepper and cayenne. Cook oysters in white stock until edges curl. Strain, reserve liquor and chop oysters. Press through sieve. Add butter and flour cooked together, seasonings and cream. Cook five minutes, add to egg lightly beaten, and serve.

Baked Calf's Heart.—Wash heart well and wipe it. Fill with good dressing made of breadcrumbs, herbs, butter and seasoning. Allow dressing room enough to swell. Tie strips of salt pork over top to keep dressing in. Put in pan with a little water, one sliced onion, one carrot and sprig or two of parsley. Bake two hours, basting often. Remove from pan, and thicken gravy with paste of flour and water. Add a little kitchen bouquet. Dish heart on platter, pour some of gravy over, garnish with boiled onions and serve rest of gravy in boat.

Rice and Bacon Tasty.—Rice and bacon for breakfast.—Cook afternoon before one cup rice in quart of water until soft, drain, cover tightly to dry in oven for few moments. When ready to use in the morning chop one green pepper and two medium-size onions very fine, parboil for five minutes, add to rice, seasoning with salt and pepper. Mold in cakes size of codfish cakes, fry as many strips of bacon as there are cakes, lift to hot dish—then dust cakes lightly with flour and brown in hot bacon fat. Lift on hot platter with strip bacon on top of each cake. This makes a tasty breakfast dish with fruit, rolls and coffee.

Savory Bread Pudding.—This is a pudding that may be eaten with mutton, pork or duck, and any odd pieces of bread may be used. Take half a pound of stale bread, two half-boiled onions, two tablespoonfuls of coarse oatmeal, three ounces of suet, half a teaspoonful of dried sage, an egg, a quarter of a pint of milk, salt and pepper. Soak the bread in cold water till soft, then squeeze as dry as possible, and crumble it fine. Chop the suet and onions and add, with all the dry ingredients, to the bread, seasoning to taste. Then stir in the egg, well beaten, and the milk. Grease a tin, pour in the mixture, and bake in a hot oven till it is done, probably about forty-five minutes. Cut it into squares and serve it with hot gravy poured over it.

Crushed bananas spread over cream toast make an agreeable dish for an invalid.

It doesn't seem possible ever to have too many pickles stored away for winter use.

As cold weather approaches give the chickens hot water to drink; they will lay better.

No fruit in the market has more possibilities than the grape—either cooked or fresh.

Put glycerine on watermelon stains and leave it a little while; then wash in clear water.

Put salt in the oven under your baking tins, and the dish will not scorch on the bottom.

Dough balls and dumplings help to take out the meat dish where the supply has run short.

Never put too much food on an invalid's tray, but serve it with the most perfect daintiness.

Add a little minced celery and parsley to the filling for chicken. It will have a delicious flavor.

Too salty soup can be saved by adding a few slices of raw potatoes and cooking a little longer.

Many people forget that grapes can be made into delicious cobblers and pies just like any other fruit.

Cold lunches pave the way to indigestion, so wherever it is possible let the children have something hot.

When making cheese dishes, it is well to add a tiny pinch of carbonate of soda, as it renders them more digestible.

When slicing bacon from the piece, the knife will cut more smoothly if it is dipped in water before cutting each slice.

To preserve patent leather shoes and boots clean with a rag dipped in milk, then polish with a piece of old velvet. This prevents the leather from cracking.

Scrub the inside of the oven once every week with hot water and soda, and scrape off any burnt matter with an old knife. A dirty oven ruins the flavor of food cooked in it.

If when making soup or beef tea for an invalid it is necessary to cool it at once pass it through a clean cloth saturated with cold water. Not a particle of fat will be left in the beef-tea.

Most housewives know that sugar will dissolve more quickly in hot water than in cold, but very few know that salt will dissolve in cold water just as quickly as when the water is boiling.

When the oven becomes too hot place a basin of cold water into it, but do not leave the door open. This answers the purpose of cooling the oven, and the rising steam prevents the food from burning.

If fish is found to be slightly tainted a good thing is to stew it for a short time in a weak solution of permanganate of potash, or burnetic acid, which destroys the tainted particles, and leaves the fish perfectly sweet and wholesome.

WEALTH OF MONARCHS.

The Westminster Gazette of London, says:—

"We have heard something of the diminuation of the Kaiser's private fortune owing to the war. But even with his fifty royal residences and interests in all manner of businesses, he has never been the richest monarch in the world. That honor has always belonged to the Czar, who, on his accession, came into the Romanoff private estate, yielding about ten million dollars a year. Beyond that his 'salary' amounted to another ten million dollars, besides many profitable investments abroad.

"There were small expenses to be deducted, such as some 2½ million dollars a year to grand dukes and duchesses. But when everything had been taken into account, the Czar remained the richest monarch in the world, far ahead of the Turkish sultan, with his 7½ million dollars, or our own King, who is the poorest in pelf and palaces of all the Old World potentates."

BLIND POULTRYMEN.

Soldiers Learn to Identify Fowls Through Touch.

Experiments are being made in England in teaching poultry farming to soldiers who have lost their sight. A group of fifteen blinded soldiers who have been receiving instruction from a poultry expert were taken recently by Capt. Pierson Webber, who himself lost his sight in the Boer War, to a big poultry farm in Kent. There the blind pupils identified various breeds of fowls put before them by examining the comb, general contour and legs of the fowls and by testing their weight. They also identified the various poultry foods by the sense of touch, some of the wounded having lost the sense of smell as well as their sight.

The poultry raisers expressed the opinion that there was no difficulty in training blind soldiers for the work which could not be overcome and the superintendent of the farm offered to train ten men. A course in poultry raising will be printed in Braille for the use of the men.

What He Used Them For.

Customer—I want another fire-extinguisher. Used the last one all up last night.

Clerk—Glad to sell them to you, sir, but aren't you rather careless at your place? This is the third one I've sold you in a week.

Customer—O, I don't use them for fire. They are the greatest things on earth for chasing out your daughter's late callers.

THE GREAT GRAY SEAL.

Sir Ray Lankester Relates an Incident With a Pup.

The great gray seal, which may often be seen on the west coasts of Scotland, Ireland, Wales, and Cornwall, where it breeds in caves, is, says Sir Ray Lankester in the London Daily Telegraph, a much bigger animal than the common seal. Its hairy coat is silky, and has a yellowish-gray tint spotted with black and dark gray most abundantly on the back. One September morning Sir Ray had set off for Pentargon Cove in North Cornwall, where common seal abounded.

At low tide we climbed down the cliff with the aid of ropes, he says, and found ourselves on the shore. My companions hastened down to the water's edge. I was about to follow them when I saw, lying on the pebbles above high-tide mark, what I took for a white fur cloak left there by some previous visitor. I walked up to it, when, to my extreme astonishment, it turned round and displayed a pair of very large black eyes and a threatening array of teeth. It was a baby seal, covered all over with a splendid growth of lemon-white fur three inches deep. He was twice as big as the fur-covered young of the common seal—more than two feet long; his black eyes were as big as pennies, and he was lying there on the upper beach, far from the water, in the full blaze of the sun, as dry and as fluffy as a well-dressed cub of polar bear's skin.

We were indeed well rewarded for our excursion in search of the seal's cave of Pentargon Cove! For this was a new-born pup of the great gray seal, entirely unconnected with the inferior population of the inaccessible cave, laid here in the open by his mother at birth (as is the habit of her species). Not knowing that the young of the gray seal refuses to enter the water until six weeks after birth, when it sheds its coat of long white hair, we cautiously rolled the little seal on my outspread coat and carried him to the water's edge. After the hissing with which he had greeted my first approach he was not unfriendly.

We expected him to wriggle into the water and swim off, but, on the contrary, he wriggled in the opposite direction, and made his way by successive heaves up the beach. He was not more than a day or two old.

On the following evening I procured in the village two men and a potato sack, and hurried to Pentargon Cove. As we approached the edge of the cliff the sun was setting. A weird sound rent the air. It was the little seal calling for his mother! I could see him from above, a little white figure all alone in the deepening gloom of the cliffs—raising his head and with his cries helplessly inviting his enemies to come and destroy him.

In a few minutes we were by his side, had placed him in the potato sack, and brought him to the upper air. On the way to the inn I purchased a large-sized baby's bottle with a fine India-rubber nipple. We placed the little seal on straw in a large open packing case in the stables, while the kitchen maid warmed some milk and filled the feeding bottle. Then I brought it to him, and touched his nose with the milky India-rubber teat. With unerring precision his lips closed on it, his nostrils opened and shut in quick succession, and he had emptied the bottle. I gave him a quart of milk before leaving him and getting my own belated meal. He slept comfortably, but at four in the morning his cries rent the air, and threatened to wake everyone in the hotel. I had to get up, descend to the kitchen, warm some more milk for him, and satisfy his hunger. He became fond of the bottle, and also of the friend who held it for him. I arranged to take him to the Zoological Gardens when, after three days, I left Bocastle. He travelled to London in the guard's van in a specially constructed cage, and was as beautiful and happy as ever when I handed him over to the superintendent at Regent's Park.

RECORD PRICE FOR SHIP.

The steamship Maritime, 5,536 tons, which was the North German Lloyd Schlieslen before she was captured as a British prize, recently brought at auction the price of $600,000, an increase of $275,000 over her price of six months ago.

A profit of $275,000 on a ship costing $325,000 indicates the extent of the present shipping boom in Great Britain. Even a half year ago vessels were selling at a premium. But the present boom breaks all records in the history of shipping.

There have been other sales of remarkable of late. One steamer, which was bought for $225,000 at the beginning of the war, changed hands at $500,000. A Copenhagen owner who last January bought a 4,234-ton steamer for $11,500 resold her this month for $200,000.

These vessels are freighters and not passenger vessels. Except when let to the Government on charters as transports, passenger ships are not particularly profitable. But the exaggerated price for freighters, often far exceeding the cost price of superannuated ships, is due to the expectation of huge profits.

The clean sweep from the seas of German and Austrian vessels, aggregating more than 4,000,000 tons, left an unprecedented chance to rivals. Neutral countries, especially the Scandinavian countries, have had the advantage over England and France, owing to their comparative immunity from submarine attacks.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, NOVEMBER 14.

I. Daniel's Test (Verses 8-13).

Verse 8. Purposed in his heart—No resolution for good is strong enough if made with the intellect only. It must be buttressed by the heart.

King's Dainties — Food and wine from the king's table might have been dedicated to the heathen divinities, and partaking of them would be an act of compromise. Or a part of the food might consist of the flesh of animals unclean according to the Jewish ceremonial law (Lev. 11. 4-20).

10. See your faces worse looking—Showing the effects of insufficient nourishment.

12. Prove thy servants — An easy way for Daniel to escape defiling himself and at the same time commend himself to the fairness of the eunuch.

Pulse to eat, and water to drink—A vegetarian diet. Pulse: peas, beans, lentils. Ezekiel and Daniel, of the ten thousand whom King Zebuchadnezzar carried off to Babylon, were the only two young men to become prominent.

II. The Outcome of the Test (Verses 15-16, 19, 20)

20. He found them ten times better—A high tribute, and one not only deserved, but easily obtained.

Magicians and enchanters—Belief in the occult was so strong that every king of ancient times had his following of sorcerers and wizards. To-day the ruler of state covets men about him with clear minds born of good common sense. Only such can face difficulties and avoid calamity. The occult can play no part in matters of modern statecraft.

WANTS TO BE A SOLDIER.

Italian Brigand Petitions King for Release.

The Italian brigand Musolino, now serving sentence of 30 years' penal servitude, has addressed a petition to the King of Italy asking to be allowed to fight and die for his country. The King received the brigand's request among a number of State papers brought to Verona to be laid before the King on his way to the Tyrolean front.

Musolino expressed his grief that his imprisonment prevents him from wearing the King's uniform, and asks permission to fight, not, however, as an enlisted volunteer, but on condition that if he remains alive through the war, whatever deeds of valor he may have accomplished, he shall return to the penitentiary and serve out his sentence. The Italian law absolutely prevents the acceptance of any such proposal.

VISITORS ON BATTLEFIELDS.

Tourists Begin Practice That Threatens to Continue.

The stream of tourists, who will travel unceasingly over the battlefields for scores of years after the European war is finished, has already begun in France. The traveller who obtains a suitable permission can now take a train from Paris to Meaux in the morning, drive in an open carriage all day over country which was the scene of some very important fighting nearly a year ago, and lie back in his hotel in Paris for a late supper.

Hundreds of wooden crosses mark the places where men fell and were hastily buried. White crosses mark the graves of the French dead; black posts with a rectangular stamp on them mark German dead.

There are still shattered churches and houses which show the marks of shrapnel and machine-gun fire, and some of the smaller bridges over the Marne are not yet replaced. One roadside hostelry which was struck by a German shell has changed its name, and now boasts a signboard inscribed in French "The Shell Inn."

War Prices in Drug Trade.

If the average housewife wants to know just where the war in Europe hits her, let her go to the nearest drug store and ask for moth balls. Or let her ask for citric acid, carbolic acid, alum, Epsom salts or a hundred other drug staples, more or less common. Also let the man who doesn't want to give diamond solitaires for gifts next Christmas watch out for imported perfumes. They will be almost as expensive and perhaps as rare.

The Fly in the Ointment.

"Why, what difference count that make?"

"Why, at the dinner table he used to photograph the joints before they were removed to the kitchen."

It is found that 100 male dogs go mad as compared with 14 females.

THE MEN WHO WIN.

Usually Are Men of Great Physical Strength.

It has been said that great men—those capable of mental work beyond the average—are almost invariably men of great physical strength also. Whether this be true or not, we find innumerable instances in which the theory is borne out in actual fact, and here are a few actual and indisputable examples:

Napoleon was capable of sitting a horse sixteen hours at a stretch, and was able to work for days without rest.

Gladstone was always muscular. At eight years he chopped down an oak four feet thick.

Bismarck was a giant. He fought twenty-eight duels, receiving only once a scar, caused by the breaking of his adversary's blade. He stood 6 feet 2 inches.

Cromwell was a football player, fond of boisterous sports. He stood nearly six feet in height, and had a strong, compact body and well-knit frame.

Robert Burns was a strong man with a firm grip, gained at the plough and flail.

Evil in Suspicion.

To be suspicious is to make oneself the friend and intimate of evil. It is to ally oneself with all the evil forces in the world. Through thinking so much of evil, through being constantly on the watch for it, the suspicious people make observations that are, at times, seemingly amazing in acuteness. But even here they do themselves harm by gaining more and more enslaved. Their loss may be understood by all of us by reflecting on what they would gain if their minds had taken the direction of goodness, allying them to all the unselfish forces.

QUEBEC HAS 150 PEOPLE'S BANKS

MR. ALPHONSE DESJARDINS AUTHOR OF SYSTEM.

Where Five Cents May Be Deposited And One Dollar May Be Borrowed.

The history of financial institutions will be searched in vain for a more romantic story than that of the people's banks of Canada. In this case the grain of mustard seed has grown into a tree.

Mr. Alphonse Desjardins, of Levis, Quebec, is a typical French-Canadian of the better class. Believing that the lack of thrift among so many of the poorer of his own people was due to lack of encouragement and opportunity, he made a study of the whole question. In this way his attention was attracted to the success of the co-operative banks of Europe. After reading all the literature on this subject that he could find, and after long correspondence with some of the leaders of the movement, he decided to try the experiment of adapting the system to the conditions in Canada.

Of course, there were kind friends to assure Mr. Desjardins that Canada was not Europe and to point out to him that this thing had never been done before, and therefore never could be done. Still, however, he was not convinced. The fact was that certain of his neighbors had caught something of his enthusiasm and were desirous of seeing the experiment tried.

First Step Well Taken.

Had this been a question of money the scheme would have died before it was born, for at the first meeting called in Mr. Desjardins own house—this was on the 6th of December, 1900—the total capital paid in for the organization of the new bank was only $26. But these institutions are not aggregations of capital, but of people, and when Mr. Desjardins found that the best of his neighbors were strongly with him, he knew that the first step had been well taken.

The new bank prospered under Mr. Desjardins' cautious and skilful management. No mistakes were made. In two years the People's Bank of Levis—that being the name of the new organization—reported a turnover of $31,116.42. Doubters were silenced, and the first converts to the idea were enthusiastic. Many were for having the system extended to other towns. But the founder of the new bank would not even consider such a thing. Realizing that the movement was one of careful experiment and slow education, he insisted on establishing one bank first. It was almost ten years before he assisted in the founding of new banks. By that time the Levis concern had gathered about a quarter of a million dollars of the people's savings and loaned the money over and over again to those who needed it and could use it to advantage. Loans of over a million dollars had been made in this way, all of it to relatively poor people and much of it to the lowest-paid of laborers, yet without the loss of a single cent of principal or interest. The effect of this work in promoting thrift and helping industry among the people can be imagined.

Then the system began to spread. To-day there are over 150 of these institutions in the Province of Quebec alone.

Every One of Them Successful.

This is a genuine growth of the soil. No millionaire has patronized this system, no Government has subsidized or otherwise encouraged it. In fact, Mr. Desjardins is on record as saying that the one thing to be avoided is Government assistance. He has asked, but in vain so far, for a Dominion law under which these banks could be given corporate identity. This request on his part has been granted by the Province of Quebec, and this law has greatly facilitated the work in that Province.

The People's Banks accept sums as low as five cents either on deposit at interest or as payment on stock. They loan as little as a dollar. It is rather unusual to have a loan of over a hundred dollars.

All business is confined to the membership of the bank, and the membership is confined strictly to the locality in which the bank is established. There are no branches. Consequently, complete neighbor-knowledge and the possession of a common interest is an unfailing defence of the integrity of the funds. This common interest is made more complete by the fact that the one-man-one-vote principle is sacredly maintained. Nobody, however wealthy, can buy shares and secure what is known in joint stock circles as "control."

The Best Rule of Sound Banking

is made the basis of all loan transactions, that is, the person who wishes to borrow money must not only give security—the endorsement of two fellow-members is enough if everything else is all right—but he must show that he can and will use the money profitably. No matter if the would-be borrower be a millionaire, he cannot borrow a dollar of the People's Bank money for purposes of enjoyment or display. All the capital is thus kept earning, and the People's Bank prospers in the prosperity of its members.

There seems to be no limit to the usefulness of these co-operative banks. They flourish in towns, but they flourish no less in farming districts and in mining or lumbering localities. They seem to do well in such new and raw settlements as those about Lake Timiskaming, and they do quite as well in the old-settled and historic parishes around Quebec.

Mr. Desjardins, by his well-won success in building up this system, has made for himself an international reputation. He has been decorated by the Pope with the Cross of the Order of St. Gregory the Great. The President of the United States has more than once invited Mr. Desjardins to take part in the important consultations now in progress on the vital question of agricultural credits. Co-operative associations and learned societies everywhere have consulted him and have given him every honor within their power.

ATMOSPHERIC NITROGEN.

With Ammonia Sulphate It Takes the Place of Soda Nitrate.

German farmers will continue to feed the country without the aid of overseas imports, in the opinion of Professor Gerlach, an authority in agricultural chemistry. Speaking before the German Agricultural Society at its yearly meeting at Berlin, he gave details showing to what extent in 1914 and 1915 the yield of crops was increased by using sulphate of ammonia and cynamide, a combination of atmospheric nitrogen with calcium, as fertilizers. In these fertilizers, he says, German farmers have a fully satisfactory substitute for the nitrate of soda which they had been importing to the amount of about 800,000 tons a year.

Professor Gerlach regards the new industry of extracting nitrogen from the atmosphere as of great promise for the future of the German food supply. He said that the factories for its recovery, mostly begun since the outbreak of the war, are now finished or nearing completion, and that when they are all in operation they will produce yearly an equivalent of 120,000 tons of pure nitrogen, for already considerably more than half of what was formerly imported. A considerable proportion of this is now being used by the military authorities for making ammunition, but will, after the war, be available for fertilizing purposes.

Pending the increase of the output till all kinds of crops can be fertilized with cynamide, Professor Gerlach advises that it be used mainly for increasing the grain yield; potatoes—the largest crop by far produced in Germany—can do very well without a fertilizer, as is proved by the splendid crop this year.

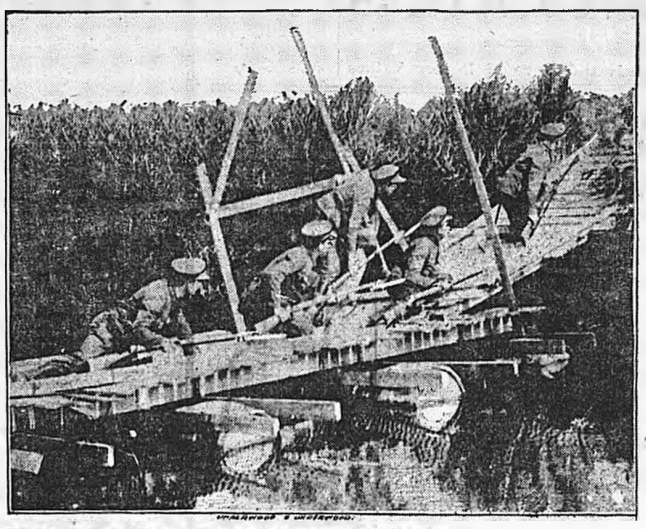
RIGORS OF THE CAMPAIGN.

Tuberculosis in the French Army Being Fought.

Among the many problems with which the French Government has to deal as an effect of the war is that of tuberculosis. Life at the front has cured or benefitted many soldiers predisposed to lung troubles. On the other hand a large number have been unable to withstand the rigors of a long campaign, and the white plague has left its mark in the ranks.

For the treatment and care of tubercular soldiers the Department of Public Hygiene has at its disposal a preliminary sum of 2,000,000 francs ($400,000). As all arrangements for caring for the men have not been completed, the War Department has temporarily undertaken the task and has been granted for each patient an allowance of 3 francs (60 cents) a day for three months. While the sanitary service is studying the best means of dealing with the question, the army is at work weeding out all who show the slightest indication of tuberculosis. Their presence is regarded as dangerous to the health of others, and every precaution is taken.

"Before long we hope to have these men isolated, where they will be in the hands of specialists and given the most scientific treatment in sanitoriums adapted to the purpose," said Monsieur Jules Briaac, director of the public health service, to the Associated Press. "For the time being they are receiving attention at the various military hospitals."



Snakes Have No Eyelids.

Snakes have no eyelids, and therefore never close their eyes. Their eyeball is covered with transparent scale much resembling glass. When the reptile casts its outer skin the eye scales come off with the rest of the transparent envelope, out of which the snake slips. This glassy eye scale is so tough that it effectually protects the true eye from the twigs, sharp grass and other obstructions which the snake encounters in its travels.

Why Allies Buy Vaseline.

Tons of vaseline have been shipped recently to the allies, particularly to Russia. So much of it has been exported that the United States Customs officers made enquiry, learning it is used for high explosives. Cordite, a powerful powder, has been considered unstable, liable to prematurely explode. Vaseline is discovered to be capable of holding the compound together, making cordite serviceable in warfare.

GREAT BRITAIN'S WAKEFUL ARMADA

NAVY OF NINETEEN HUNDRED AND FIFTEEN.

How inspiring and fine Rev. Norman Maclean, of St. Giles, Edinburgh, in his impression of that great Armada which neither slumbers nor sleeps in the great North Sea, and to which, under God, we owe our safety! Let the feeble hearts read these glowing words and cast out fear.

"From every funnel of dreadnought, cruiser and destroyer there rises into the warm, still autumn air the smoke lazily curling. For in every ship the fires are burning ceaselessly, and at a moment's notice the fleet can sweep out to sea. And that the smoke may swirl up constantly miners toil in the bowels of the earth. If one follows this issue to the last, in the miner's hands the fate of the Empire lies. As here there is the ceaseless watch and service, may God grant that far away the service may be as faithful and as sure. But that smoke rising up incessantly from dreadnought and cruiser is the security of the Empire.

The Power That Saves.

"It is the power to smite instantly, and that power has saved us. When we read of thousands of square miles in the East overwhelmed by the enemy, and of the rush of the torrent of devastation over plains and villages and cities, the heart is apt to be discouraged. But there can be no discouragement for him who sees this. For this power has captured the seas of all the world; through it the ends of the earth pour their riches into the midst of our streets; by the might of it a whole continent has been delivered from the withering blight of Germanic culture, and save for a force shut in and imprisoned by the sea in East Africa the might of Germany is crushed in Africa. From the great Northwest to the long wash of Australasian seas not an inch of territory is left to that culture which trod the Cross underfoot that it might dominate the world with the nailed fist. And the heart of that power which has wrought the deliverance of the world is here.

The Unfolding Morn.

"As the mist slowly melts in the heat of the up-climbing sun, and as ship after ship, hitherto unseen, show their grim sides, there comes to the heart the sense of irresistible might. And with the sense of that overwhelming power standing guard over our homes; the awful fear of the fate that overwhelmed Belgium falling on our women and children is lifted for ever.

"There falls on the heart the sense of security. The boom of the guns means inward peace. The men who stand behind the guns are calm and peaceful. The commander-in-ch of receives his visitors on the deck of his flag-ship as though the sound of war were hushed in all the world. It is not in great guns that the fountain of their calm lies, for they who go down to the sea in ships envisage the Eternal."

A Seaside Sermon.

Mr. Maclean gives this description of a sermon by the sea:—

"On the shore of a green isle on the Sunday morning a representative congregation of sailors assembled to worship God. The sunshine played in the wavelets under their feet. Above them the scanty fields of corn on the slopes were yellowing for the harvest. And there they sang as their fathers have ever sung in days of stress:—

I to the hills will lift mine eyes,
From whence doth come mine aid.
My safety cometh from the Lord,
Who Heaven and earth hath made.

"The lapping of the wavelets and the breeze from the hills mingled with the song of eternal faith. And to them Dr. Wallace Williamson declared the gospel of the soul's peace.

Nailed Hand and Mailed Fist.

"He talked to them of that God whose power casts down the mighty from the seats of their iniquity, and who ever exalteth the righteous and the meek. There was but the one choice for the world to make—the choice between the nailed hand and the mailed fist. It was because of the overwhelming passion in their hearts urging them to make the ideal of the nailed hand of the Crucified operative throughout the world that they were there facing perils and death. And he told them of the soldiers in Flanders going forth to fight with illumined eyes, having sung:—

Yea, though I walk in death's dark vale,
Yet will I fear none ill.

"And as they listened the faces of these men shone also. In the sailors and soldiers who to-day fight our battles there is the spirit of the Covenanters of old. The sword that they wield is gripped in God's hand. The hearts of these men are endued with the might of God.

GHOSTLY DRILL SERGEANT.

Strange Story Told in Police Court of Ireland.

The statement that her dead husband, who was a drill sergeant, appeared every night and drilled recruits, not of flesh and blood, caused Mrs. Mary Fay, of Ballynacargy, Westmeath, to assault Mrs. Kate Murphy, of the same town in Ireland.

This strange evidence was given at the Ballynacargy Petty Sessions when Mrs. Fay was charged with the assault. Mrs. Murphy said that Mrs. Fay came to her house and accused her of saying that the dead sergeant, Christy Fay, is seen every night in Ballynacargy drilling volunteers just as he used to do in his lifetime. She then knocked her down and broke her arm.

Mrs. Fay, when in court, burst into tears and sobbed. It was a hard thing to say, she said, that after his death her husband was seen on the square drilling. Before he died he was very well attended by his clergy.

WAR CUTS DOCTORS' BILLS.

Sufferings of Others Make Some Forget Their Ills.

Strangely enough, one of the results of the war is a dwindling in the incomes of some of London's best-known physicians. The men who were making $20,000 to $50,000 a year have suffered especially. The explanation offered is that the war has given persons not so sick as they thought they were something else to think of than their ailments. Probably this isn't all of it; undoubtedly many who need a physician are managing somehow to do without, perhaps to their lasting cost.

Nevertheless, this explanation points to a very real thing; no one denies that thinking has a lot to do with our ailments, with our happiness or discontent, with everything in life. If war has helped some persons to think straight by giving them something to think of besides themselves it has offset a little its addition to the woe of humanity.

KING VISITS WORKS.

Displaying Great Interest In All Engineering Plants.

In the course of his tour of works in various parts of England the King paid a visit to Leeds, writes a correspondent. At the station he was met by the Lord Mayor of Leeds (Mr. J. E. Benford), the Town Clerk (Sir Robert E. Fox), and Captain Peter Thomas, a former Leeds solicitor, who is now organizing secretary for the Ministry of Munitions in the Yorkshire area.

The King, who was attired in the khaki service uniform of a field marshal, looked particularly well and happy, and he smilingly acknowledged the cheers which greeted him from the crowds which had become aware of his arrival and gathered outside the railway station and at the various places which he had visited.

The morning was occupied by visits to five engineering works. The King displayed great interest in the various processes, and the genial manner in which he entered into conversation with the workers was much appreciated by them. At one works he had presented to him all the foremen and their older hands, and he had a particularly long conversation with a white-haired veteran of eighty summers, Thomas Adgie, popularly known as "Tapper Tom" by reason of his skill as a driller. He has been at the foundry 43 years.

"Eh, ah'm reight proud to see ye," said Tapper Tom when he shook hands with his Majesty.

The King smiled and said: "And I am glad to see you, and to see you looking so well."

On hearing the old man's age the King asked, "Aren't you tired of work yet?" The veteran's reply, "No, ah think nowt ahaht it. It's not looks ah goes by, it's how ah feel," made the King laugh.

Another veteran, named Wilson, 75 years of age, was warmly congratulated by the King on his record of service—51 years—at the foundry. "He shook hands right heartily," said Wilson afterwards, "and my black, oily hand left a lovely mark right across his glove, but he didn't seem to care."

At this particular works, where the manager explained that they could make anything from a needle to an anchor, the King was presented with a small needled instrument, weighing half an ounce, as a souvenir.

At another works he noticed the khaki uniform of a soldier who had been recalled to work from the front, and he had a pleasant chat with the man.

The girls employed at one works gave the King a particularly hearty welcome, and had decorated the workshops with hunting to celebrate the event—a little attention which did not escape the King's notice.

WOMEN AS DISPENSERS.

Chemistry Offers Interesting and Well-Paid Career.

Many notable women took part in the discussion on educational work at the British Association meeting lately, and debate on other subjects go to prove that chemistry offers the educated woman an interesting and well-paid career. It is, moreover, a very suitable profession, requiring a talent for detail, which most women possess. The War Office employs a number of qualified women dispensers in military hospitals, and there is an increasing demand for their services. The hours are not excessive, and seldom exceed seven in the day's work. Examination results show that women have been very successful in the study of chemistry, and several girl students have lately won important pharmaceutical scholarships in open competition with men.

FRENCH WOMEN DEFEAT JOFFRE

EVADE ORDER AGAINST VISITING HUSBANDS

The Women are Sure They Know Better Than Joffre in This Matter.

Joffre is a great general, admired and beloved by all the French people and others also, but he is only a man after all and he cannot be expected to come out victoriously when it comes to a fight against women, nor is it probable that his defeat rankles very bitterly.

The French women, although they do not feel the need of asserting themselves in the war, politics, or any public affairs, have very definite ideas of their right of reigning supreme in one domain, and there they are not to be interfered with.

They have given up their husbands without a murmur—better than that, with a smile—when the country demanded them, but they think it needless to accept the separation as absolute whenever their men are at rest away from the trenches, and if they can spare the time and the money, they want to go to see them.

But stern orders were issued long months ago from headquarters: "It is strictly forbidden to any woman to go and see her husband in the military zone."

No Punishment.

Little heed was paid to this decree, and the women continued to go wherever they knew their husbands would be resting.

Then more strict orders were posted: "All men who call their wives or allow them to come and visit them will be severely punished."

Useless again. When arraigned the men protested that they had neither asked nor allowed their wives to come, but come they would.

It was still insisted in high quarters that punishment should overtake the man who proved unable to prevent his wife from going to his side, and the situation became really serious.

The journeys were made, though with more secrecy and under all kinds of pretences. In one case a long-forgotten relation was suddenly remembered in some remote part of a remote department and great solicitude felt as to his health, which was so bad as to be an excellent reason to obtain the necessary permission to visit him from the Commissaire de Police or the military authorities.

Held Up March.

If one really tires hard to find them there are no end of good reasons why one should go to a certain place.

Sometimes one will resort to quite desperate means. Such was the case of a Parisienne who, after several unsuccessful attempts, reached the place where her husband's company had been quartered, only to learn that the men had just left on their way to the front. Without losing a minute, she hired a carriage, and by another road, reached a point where the company was to pass. There, blocking the way with her arms extended, she ordered the soldiers to stop, and the captain rode forward to enquire what was happening.

Hearing her story, the captain smiled and commanded: "Ten minutes' rest while this woman kisses her husband!" And the whole company applauded.

Of course, all the women feel the righteousness of their cause. They are sure that in that matter they know better than Joffre. They know they are doing their duty toward the country, for by a timely visit to their husbands they make of them better soldiers.

ENGLISH DOG GETS RECRUITS.

Follows the Lancashire Regiment Everywhere.

Stories regarding the various activities of dogs in the European war have been many. They have dragged machine guns into place, they have played the part of spies and sentinels and have done efficient work in the Red Cross and Ambulance Departments. Now, it would appear from the tale told by Captain Hunt, of the Herts Regiment, they have entered the recruiting service.

"When the regiment commenced the tour at Newmarket," relates the captain, "a Lancashire dog attached himself to us, and has now been with us nearly a fortnight. He is an English dog and belongs to a jolly good regiment—the Lancashires.

"He has been with us everywhere all through the march. He has been knocked down twice and ridden over by a motor car, and got up alive and smiling like a Lancashire soldier.

"He likes women and children, men in khaki, and is very fond of the band, but he cannot get along with male civilians between the ages of 19 and 40. After a recruiting meeting we always let him loose. He has brought us a lot of recruits."

Unreasonable.

The Woman's National Anthem

The following letter was recently received by a resident of Montreal who does not care to have his name published, but for whom our informants can vouch:

"While in London recently I came in touch with a little incident which I think will interest you. I attended one day at noon a recruiting meeting in front of the Mansion House. A great crowd of men and women listened to the recruiting sergeants, all of whom had "done their bit' at the front. A lady with a magnificent voice sang patriotic songs, which perhaps were more effective than the speeches of the recruiting sergeants. At the close of the meeting it was announced that after singing "The King," the lady would sing "The Woman's National Authem." Then in splendid voice she sang:

'God save our splendid men,
Send them safe hoffie again,
God save our men.
Keep them victorious,
Patient and chivalrous,
They are so dear to us,
God save our men."

As she sang, every man stood uncovered, and with bowed head, and there were not many dry eyes. I think it would be a good thing if the women of Canada would learn this as the "British Women's National Anthem," for surely it is the prayer of every loyal British woman. After the meeting I went up to the singer, handed her my card, and asked her for the words she had just sung. When she said I was from Montreal she said, 'Oh I sang in Montreal, and I will be glad to send the words to the women of Canada.' She wrote them on the back of the blue envelope that contained my passport."

Threshing operations have been wound up in this neighborhood for another year. Most of the oats are badly colored, but that will not spoil their feeding value.

Fall plowing, like the rest of farm work this season, is going slow. The ground, which had been thoroughly soaked, since the dry weather set in has become crusted, and makes plowing in many cases almost impossible. An early winter would be a calamity to the farmers, as very little has been done.

WALKERTON

The Fall Assizes, which open in Walkerton on Tuesday next before Chief Justice R M Meredith, will be burdened with no criminal cases, and the customary white gloves symbolic of the freedom of the county from crime, will be presented by the Sheriff to the Judge. The Court House flag, however, will fly over two civil cases, thus showing that Bruce is still turning out some grist for the legal mill.

While plowing on his farm near Solway last Friday, Mr Geo Craig's team got into a large hole in the field and in attempting to lead them out one of the horses jumped forward and struck Mr Craig with its front foot on the leg, snapping the bone like a biscuit a short distance below the knee. As he was alone when the accident occurred and could not summon help with his cries, he was obliged to make his way painfully to the house, which he eventually reached in a much exhausted state. On Dr Sinclair of Walkerton being called the patient was removed to the hospital here where he is now recovering from the mishap.

For advertising and holding a shooting match and raffle in Formoso on Thanksgiving Day, Philip Weller of that place was summoned by Constable Armstrong to appear before Magistrate Johnston at Kinlough for the offence. Just a Formosite with an eye for home industry later laid a similar complaint against him and had him fined $1 and costs by a Formoso court. As Weller, through his solicitor, O E Klein, claims he can't be fined twice for the same offence, he apparently thought he was rescued from the hands of Johnston by the Formoso fine. But Crown Attorney Dixon, we understand, has given it as his opinion that the first summons holds, and as a consequence there promises to be a lot of law expounded on this point at the adjourned trial before Magistrate Johnston at Kinlough to-day.

The eight o'clock closing ordinance which came into force on Monday was commemorated in Walkerton by the boosting of the price of booze by the local hostelries. Barrel whiskey that formerly cost 5c a horn now retails over the mahogany at 10c a drink or three for a quarter. Sealed goods are raised from 10c to 15c a glass or twice for 25c. As an anti-treating bill the new schedule promises to prove a wonder, for few will be able to call up their friends often and finance the deal. As a result the bunch that usually decorate the bar-rooms like wallpaper will feel as dry as the plaster they lean against, waiting for some Mr Good-Thing to step in and give the come-on sign to moisten up their whistles. Lone drinks in silk rooms will as a consequence be getting more popular among the bread-winners, and the old kick that fewer licenses mean longer bars in town will soon die out.—Herald and Times.

Westbrook, Me. — "I was passing through the Change of Life and had pains in my back and side and was so weak I could hardly do my housework. I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it has done me a lot of good. I will recommend your medicine to my friends and give you permission to publish my testimonial." — Mrs. LAWRENCE MARTIN, 12 King St., Westbrook, Maine.

Manston, Wis. — "At the Change of Life I suffered with pains in my back and loins until I could not stand. I also had night-sweats so that the sheets would be wet. I tried other medicines but got no relief. After taking one bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I began to improve and I continued its use for six months. The pains left me, the night-sweats and hot flashes grew less, and in one year I was a different woman. I know I have to thank you for my continued good health ever since." — Mrs. M. J. BROWNELL, Manston, Wis.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled in such cases.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

Looks Like Gallant Bravery

Our Willow Creek correspondent mentions the case of an automobile shying at a baby carriage and going into the ditch. To us it looks like a praiseworthy action, with the driver a hero who would rather die in the ditch himself than run over a baby. Not all the brave fellows are in Europe yet, if we get a true view of this auto accident.

Mass Meeting on Sunday Afternoon

Mr Jos Gibson, of Ingersoll, ex-president of the Dominion Alliance, will be the speaker at a mass meeting to be held in the town hall, Paisley, at 4 o'clock on Sunday afternoon, Nov 21st. As Mr Gibson's name is almost a household word among temperance people, and he has been heard in Paisley on previous occasions, it is quite certain that there will be a large audience out on Sunday afternoon. Master Willie Norris, a boy singer, will be present and enliven the meeting with solos.

Five Artillerymen Sent Off

Jas. Patterson, Guy Purdy, Wilmer Sparrow, Leslie Shaw and John Hamilton who joined the artillery force in Toronto a few days ago, were given a hearty, demonstrative send-off when they left town on Monday to join their company and begin training. Several hundred citizens wended their way to the station, preceded by the brass band and Piper Harold McLeod, to bid good-bye and cheer on the quintette of young Paisley braves who go to prepare themselves for the Empire's needs in meeting the onslaughts of our militant enemy. On behalf of the municipality Reeve Ballachey presented each of the men with a cheque for $10, also addressing to them a few words appropriate to the occasion.

Why Is It?

Why is it, it is often asked, that people in small towns can find no better business than prying into other people's business, and then exaggerating the truth in regard to the same. People who pretend to be Christians, who attend church regularly, who, in the sight of their neighbors are generous and charitable, yet who, without the slightest provocation, pick up some little mistake, or more often, at nothing, will so scandalize one as to ruin his or her reputation for life. While they would not steal from them worldly goods yet they rob him or her of what is more precious than gold—a good reputation. Why can't people practice the christianity that they preach and "do unto others as you would have them do unto you?"

"What a beautiful bird! What is it?"

"It's a prairie chicken. It won't take the trouble to move—you'll see," said the man, driving slowly past, and leaving the bird standing still.

"They must be very tame," said Rosalie.

"No, they ain't nyther, but they've got a heap o' sense. We are driving. Now, if I had o' been a-foot with a gun, or anything that looks like a gun to it, why, it would ha' taken wing in a minute. Same case with a deer—it'll stand right still and look at you going past with your team; but only just let it catch its eyes on you when you're walking 'long o' your gun, and it's off in an instant."

Wolf's Grove was not what its name indicated—an isolated piece of wood. It was rather a portion of that vast, unbroken forest stretching back and back hundreds of miles, and even to the banks of Lake Superior. Here the old primeval forest trees were of gigantic size, but thinly scattered, and standing singly apart, like the outposts of a vast army.

Half a mile within the Grove, where the trees were thicker, stood the cabin originally built for a school and meeting-house. There was not a foot of cultivated ground around it, nor a house, nor a field, within three miles of it.

Mark Sutherland and Rosalie alighted, and entered the house, while the driver secured his horses and gave them water. The cabin was unusually large and well built, being nearly thirty feet square, and constructed of huge logs, well hewn, and well cemented. The cabin fronted south, where one door admitted into the only room; opposite this door, in the north wall, stood the large, open fireplace. The room was lighted by two windows, fronting each other, east and west. The house was in good repair, with the single exception of the broken windows.

"A very different abode from that you have left for my sake, dear Rosalie; and yet, Rose, it is a palace compared to some."

"I know it is; and I only wonder that it has been left so long untenanted."

"Why, you see, my dear, this house is too remote from the village for any one but a farmer, and as it stands upon the reserved school lands, of course no farmer can cultivate the ground."

"Will it not be too far for you?"

"With me it is different. I like to walk, and do not grudge my steps. The three miles' walk, morning and evening, will do me good. My only anxiety will be in leaving you. Will you be very lonesome, dear?"

"Lonesome? I don't know. I should be lonesome anywhere without you, Mark."

"But will you be afraid to stay all day long alone?"

"Afraid? Of what? Is there any cause of fear?"

"No, dear, no cause for fear; but as Emilia said of jealousy, 'one might say of fear:

'That fearful souls will not be answered so;
They are not ever fearful for a cause,
But fearful for they are fearful.'"

"Well, I am not afraid with or without a cause. A child would not be afraid in this quiet place," said Rosalie. "How still! No sound to be heard but the rustle of the leaves and the ripple of water, that must be near!" she continued, looking from the window, while Mark walked about the room and made notes of glass, putty, a door latch, and such little matters.

"If you'd like a drink, there's one of the finest springs in the whole country down there," said the landlord, taking a tin cup from the wagon and handing it to Mark. Rosalie was already going down the path. They reached the spring, and found the water cold and clear as crystal and then went up; and, as their host was in a hurry to be off, they entered the carryall to return to the village.

"Well, are you going to take it?" asked the driver, looking around as he took the reins and started.

"Why, of course. I have already taken it."

"I knowed that; but I thought when she saw how lonesome it was, she'd object. 'Tain't many women who'd agree to live out there in that lonesome place."

"I am sure my wife prefers it to an inferior cabin nearer the village."

"Yes, indeed, I do," said Rosalie.

"Well, every one to their taste," observed the landlord, cracking his whip and making his horses fly.

The afternoon was employed by Mark Sutherland in collecting together necessary provisions, to be taken with their furniture to the cabin; and by Rosalie in hemming napkins, preparatory to her housekeeping.

In the evening the hunters returned from an unsuccessful expedition; fatigued and mortified, they gathered around the supper table. But the curiosity of the hostess elicited from them the fact that they had not even hit upon the track of the wolves.

CHAPTER XXI.

All the forenoon of the next day Mr. Garner, the landlord, was absent with his team; so that our young people were obliged to defer their removal until the afternoon.

At two o'clock the capacious wagon of the hotel stood before the door, laden with furniture, trunks, provisions, and so forth. A tolerable seat was arranged for Rosalie among the baggage; but Mark, on foot, accompanied the landlord. The horses never got out of a walk, so that it was nearly four o'clock when they entered Wolf's Grove and drew up before the log cabin. Mr. Garner assisted Mark to unload the wagon, and take in the furniture and arrange the heaviest part of it. Then, having watered his horses, he wished them good luck, jumped upon his seat, and drove off.

And Mark and Rosalie found themselves standing, looking at each other, alone, in the forest cabin. It was a moment in which flashed back upon each the memory of their whole past lives, and the intense realization of their present position. A doubt whether to weep or smile quivered over Rosalie's features. Mark saw the tremor of her lips and eyelids, and drew her to his heart; and she drooped her head upon his shoulder and smiled through her tears. He whispered, cheerily:

"Never mind, dear; you will be one of the honored pioneer women of the West. And now, let us see if we cannot get this place into a little order."

The room, as I said, was large and square, with a window east and west, facing each other, and a stone fireplace north, facing a broad door south. The walls were unplastered, but well planed and cemented, and gray with time and use. The floor was of rough but sound pine plank. A broad shelf over the fireplace served for a mantel-piece. In the corner between the east window and the fireplace stood the step-ladder leading to the loft. In the opposite corner, between the west window and the fireplace, were three triangular shelves, that did duty as cupboard or buffet. Finally, the sashes of the windows were good, but the glass was all broken out of them. This was the state of the room when Mark and Rosalie looked around it. Mark went up to the step-ladder to examine the loft, but found it so low that even a woman could not stand upright in it.

Then they began to arrange their furniture. It was very easily done, they had so little—a bedstead, with its appointments, a table, a half-dozen chairs, and almost everything else in half-dozens. The bedstead had already been put up in the corner, and the table placed in the corresponding corner between the door and the east window. They set the chairs in their places, and then Mark began to unpack the china, while Rosalie arranged it on the shelves of the corner-cupboard. There were several things—remnants of past refinement—out of keeping with their present condition; among them, the French china, that looked upon their rough pine shelves as the elegant Mark Sutherland and the fair and delicate Rosalie looked in their rude log cabin, and the superb white Marseilles counterpanes, whose deep fringes touched the rough plank floor; and the tester and valance of fine and beautiful network; and, lastly, the tamboured curtains that lay upon the chairs, ready to be put up when Mark should have mended the windows. These were certainly out of place here, but it could not be helped; they were Rosalie's little personal effects, endeared to her by long possession, and by their having been the property, and some of them—the tamboured curtains and the net valance, for instance—the handiwork of her mother. By sunset all was arranged. Now the young master of the house began to employ himself, taking out the sashes and laying them upon the table, and laying pane after pane in their places.

Mark busied himself with the window sashes, trying pane after pane in the empty forms. But at length, turning around, he smiled and said:

"It's no use, Rosalie; I'm not a glazier, and so carefully as I thought I measured the sashes and the glass, they will not exactly fit, and so I suppose they must be left until to-morrow."

And he replaced the empty sashes in the window frames. Then, seeing the neglected barrel of flour, he wheeled it up against the wall, near the door, and said it must remain there for the present; and Rosalie took a coarse, clean tablecloth and spread it over the beef, that still lay upon the top.

"And now, dear, I believe we are as well fixed as we can be for the present. Nothing remains but to get supper; and, as I was out here in the West two years before you ever saw it, I shouldn't wonder if I hadn't to give you some instruction."

"You teach me to cook! I, my uncle's housekeeper for two years!" exclaimed Rosalie.

Mark laughed, and bade her remember that when she was "uncle's" housekeeper that her housekeeping duties and responsibilities consisted in carrying the keys and ordering what she pleased to have for dinner. And he further advised her not to snap up her liege lord in that way. Whereupon Rosalie bade him mind his own business and his briefs; for that she would slap him, and box his ears, too, whenever the spirit moved her. Mark snatched her, laughing, to his bosom, and half suffocated her with kisses, and then, holding her tight, bade her do her wickedest.

And he gazed down on her there standing within his arms—so small, so fair, so perfectly helpless, so utterly in his power; and all the wantonness of youth fled from before her helplessness and her beauty, and a flood of unutterable tenderness rushed over his heart; and, still gazing upon her with infinite love, he said:

"God forever bless you, you delicate, beautiful creature; and God forever forsake me, if ever willingly I give you a moment's pain or sorrow!"

Blushing, Rosalie withdrew herself from his now yielding clasp; and, to cover her girlish embarrassment, she took the new bucket and put it in his hands, requesting him to go to the spring and bring her fresh water to fill the tea-kettle, and adding:

"You shall see what nice biscuits and what nice tea I can make."

Rosalie, observing the floor littered, looked for the broom to sweep it up; and then laughed to find that, with all their getting, they had got no broom.

Mark came in with the pail of water, and said he would go and get some brush to kindle a fire. And while he was gone, Rosalie put water in a basin to wash her hands preparatory to making the biscuits; and then she discovered that they had forgotten soap also. And while she stood in dismay, wondering what else might have been omitted, Mark re-entered with a pile of brush on his shoulders, "like Christian with his bundle of sin," he said. He threw it down upon the hearth, and began to look around, and then he broke into a gay, prolonged laugh.

"What's the matter, Mark? Are you daring to laugh at me, with my sleeves and skirt tucked up?"

"Oh, Rosalie! we have heads—and so have cabbages, when they have come to maturity!"

"Well, don't laugh yours off your shoulders, but tell me what you're laughing at!"

"We have not brought a match nor a candle!"

"Oh, no! You don't say so!"

"It is a positive fact."

"We have forgotten soap and brooms, too; we have forgotten everything!"

"Only a few things that make everything useless."

"What's to be done? We can't cook supper to-night, or even breakfast to-morrow morning, without a fire."

"No. Let's see—I think the surest way will be for me to go back to Shelton this evening, and get the matches, and then I can also get soap, a broom and my pistols, which were likewise forgotten."

"Go back to Shelton and back this evening and sun already down? You will be tired to death!"

"No, dear; I can walk that three miles in about an hour, borrow Mr. Garner's saddle-horse to ride back, and take him home again in the morning, when I go to the office. And my brave little girl will not be afraid to stay here a few hours by herself?"

"Afraid? No; surely not."

"You can fasten the door with this wooden pin."

"Oh, I shall not wish to fasten the door. I shall sit on the sill and watch the stars, and see if I can read our future destiny on their orbs, and wait for the moon to rise, and for you to come."

"No, you must not do that, Rose. The woods are damp, and the evening air chill. And, now I think of it, this cabin will be too cool for you with this draught through the open windows. Let's see if we cannot do something with them. If you had anything to tack up against them, Rosalie——"

She went to a box and took out two sheets, each of which, doubled, was tacked against a window, and because the breeze still lifted them, a few tacks were driven in the sides and bottoms of these temporary blinds to keep them down. Mark put on his coat, kissed Rosalie, bade her keep up her heart, and departed. She stood at the door watching him until he disappeared, and then entered the darkening house.

Did Mark Sutherland—did Rosalie—did either imagine the grim horror of the next few hours? It was a night that one of them never, in after life, forgot—whose fearful memory haunted thought by day, and visions by night, when the dreamer would start from sleep, and, with convulsive shivers and cold perspiration, gaze around in terror that could not be reassured.

WAR AND BUTTERFLIES.

Centuries ago a chronicler of the crusades recorded quaintly of a certain vain and valorous knight:

"Three wounds he received in this battle, whereat he laughed; but the Paynim who shore his tall plume he cursed deeply, and rested not till he had, with his good sword, shorn off his head."

That was in the day when every gentleman who was not a priest must be a fighter, and could be a dandy only by the way. It was many years later that another type arose, dandy first and fighter afterward; the graceful idler, the society fop, suddenly transformed by patriotism, at his country's call, into a hero. History proved him, fiction adopted him; he became one of the most popular figures in drama, story, and romance. But until now neither fact nor fiction has supplied a corresponding type of heroine.

The great war of to-day, although it demands of many of the noble women who have answered the call greater ability, responsibility, and thoroughness of training than has ever been demanded of women before, has also offered opportunities of service to others, hitherto merely women of fashion and the gay world, which many have eagerly accepted. Women used only to organizing balls toil on committees; women who have shone in foreign capitals interpret for hapless refugees; women who have played with petted children in charming nurseries establish orphanages, care for destitute mothers, or adopt war babies. Other women, of the modern athletic type, untrained in nursing, devote their nerve and muscle to slaving in hospitals,—hastily improvised, ill equipped, overcrowded, undermanned hospitals,—where they fag for the real nurses, and turn their hands to anything from writing wills and messages for dying men to menial and often horrible tasks of washing, scrubbing and disinfecting.

Others give themselves, with their automobiles, to the Red Cross, and drive their own cars, filled with wounded, over war-torn roads and half-wrecked bridges with skill and daring. Often they run them under fire, and not one of them has flinched.

"If ever this terrible time, which seems an endless nightmare, does really end," the American wife of an Englishman of high social position, who has been loyally working with the rest, wrote home recently, "and if I wake up to peace and pretty clothes and gay doings, and life as it used to be—sometimes I wonder who it will be that will wake? Not I, as I am now, or it wouldn't be waking, and not I, the old I of before the war; that I, my dear, is as dead as if she had been shot. I want to be happy and jolly again, yet when I think of the old life it seems no more possible to take it up and live it than to go back and be a little girl. I have died, or grown up, or been born again since then—I don't quite know which! I only know that I am, and must be, different, and that I cannot even wish to be the same again."

Sometimes to lose a self is to find a soul.

BIG GIFT FOR WOUNDED.

New Zealand Woman Gives Mining Land Worth $75,000,000.

It is announced by the Government that a wealthy woman resident of New Zealand has offered to make the colony a free gift of one of the most valuable pieces of mining land in the island, the only condition being that all profits from the sale of minerals shall be used for the support of wounded soldiers.

The land offered contains principally an ore called scheelite, yielding tungsten which is used principally in hardening steel. The deposit, according to mining engineers, should yield 30,000 tons of the metal, worth about $75,000,000.

Sure He Would.

Making Better Farm Butter.

Nearly all butter sold by the farmer is of poorer quality than it should be. By more careful handling and better methods there is no reason why this product should not only be improved in quality, but a better price should be received for it. By carrying out the following conditions and methods a very much better grade of butter should be produced:

Hand separator cream produces better butter than that separated by any other method. The deep can surrounded by cold water is second best; pans and crocks are third best, and the water-dilution method comes last.

The cream should be kept in as nearly a sweet condition as possible until enough has been gathered for a churning. This should then be soured or ripened. To ripen the cream warm it to a temperature of 75 to 80 degrees; until it is sour enough; then cool down to a temperature of from 55 to 60 degrees, which is right for churning. Let it stand at this temperature for an hour or so before churning, if possible. This will cause the butter to come in better condition. Cream that is being ripened should be thoroughly stirred several times before it is ready for churning.

It is often advisable to save some of the buttermilk of one churning to be used as starter (the same as yeast in bread making) for the next batch of cream. Add a small amount of this buttermilk to the sweet cream when enough has been gathered for a churning; thoroughly stir it, and it will ripen very much more rapidly. Care should be exercised to keep this old buttermilk in as good condition as possible.

Strain all cream into the churn. This will remove all clots and particles of curd, and there will be no danger of white specks in the butter. Do not fill the churn over one third to one half full. Give the cream room for agitation, which insures quick churning. Turn the churn just fast enough to give the cream the greatest amount of agitation.

The butter should be gathered until the grains become about one half the size of wheat. Then draw off the buttermilk through a strainer and wash the butter in cold water two or three times or until the wash water is removed practically clear. In washing, care should be exercised not to bring the grains together in one mass, but rather keep it in the granular condition. The washing of the butter removes the buttermilk and makes the butter keep for a longer time. It also puts it in better condition for salting.

The butter should be taken from the churn in the granular condition and the salt sprinkled over it before it has been worked together. Usually a scant ounce of salt is added for each pound of butter.

One working, at the time of salting is usually sufficient, providing the butter is hard enough when removed from the churn. If the butter is somewhat soft when taken out, it can be salted and set away for a few hours until it gets hard enough to finish. Butter is usually worked enough when the water has been removed so that it will bend without breaking. Too much working will spoil its grain and make it salvy, while leaving too much water in it will spoil its keeping qualities.

Pack or print the butter as soon as it has been worked sufficiently and put it in a cool place until it is taken to the market. Remember that the appearance of the package, as well as the way the butter is packed, has a great deal to do with the selling price.

In order to make a uniform colored butter for the entire year, some color may be used. Very little will be required during the spring and summer months, when the cows are getting green feed. Colored butter is not only more appetizing, but can be sold on the market for a very much better price than that which is not colored. The color should be added to the churn before starting to churn.

War upon Pain!

Pain is a visitor to every home and usually it comes quite unexpectedly. But you are prepared for every emergency if you keep a small bottle of Sloan's Liniment handy. It is the greatest pain killer ever discovered.

Simply laid on the skin—no rubbing required—it drives the pain away instantly. It is really wonderful.

PAIN IN THE BACK

Usually Comes from Muscular Rheumatism.

Do not worry about a pain in the back. The worry will do you more harm than the pains. The cause of most backaches is muscular rheumatism, which is painful enough, but not fatal. Lumbago is a form of muscular rheumatism, so is a stiff neck. Sufferers from any form of rheumatism should keep their general health up to the highest standard by the use of a blood-building tonic like Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, while taking good, nourishing food, without too much meat. Proper nutrition and pure blood are the best means of fighting rheumatism. Rheumatism comes from an acid in the blood, build it up, strengthen the system, and drive out the poisonous acid that causes rheumatism. In this way sufferers have found complete recovery as is shown by the following case: Mrs. Samuel Childerhouse, Orillia, Ont., says:—"About three years ago I was greatly afflicted with a severe pain in the back, which I thought at first was due to kidney trouble. I tried a number of remedies, but they did not help me any, in fact, the pain was growing worse, and got so bad that I was quite unable to do my housework. I could not even sweep a floor. I was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I am glad I acted upon the advice, for before I had been taking the Pills long the pain began to subside, and under the continued use disappeared entirely, and I have not since been bothered with it in any way. My husband was also cured of a severe attack of indigestion by this same medicine, so that we both have much reason to be grateful for it."

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

GIVEN AWAY.

The Irishman's Answer Astonished the Colonel.

There used to be a certain stern old colonel stationed at Aldershot who was a great stickler for all the officers being acquainted with the names and genealogies of the various men of their troops. A well-known jovial captain, who was never yet at a loss for a reply to any question asked him, was once put sublimely through his facings.

"Captain Dash," said his superior officer, surveying a posse of young recruits, "what is this man's name, and where does he come from?"

"His name's Brown, sir, and he is a native of Derbyshire," remarked the calm captain, prepared for any amount of fabrication, but in reality not knowing one single point upon which he was likely to be questioned.

"And this man—what is his name, and where was he born?" was the next inquiry.

"Oh, his name's Smith, and he's a native of Devon," answered the plunging captain, as coolly as though he were telling the truth.

"Of Devon," repeated the colonel. "Dear me!—my own native place. So, my man"—addressing the grinning recruit—"you are actually from Devon?"

"Faix, yis, yer honor; and troth it's a grand place intoirely, so it is!" was the reply.

The colonel fell back, very much astonished, and Captain Dash had to see him later on in private.

TURN OVER TIME

When Nature Hints About the Food.

When there's no relish to food and all that one eats doesn't seem to do any good is the time to make a turn over in the diet, for that's Nature's way of dropping a hint that the food isn't the kind required.

For a number of years I followed railroad work, much of it being office work of a trying nature. Meal times were our busiest; and eating too much and too quickly of food such as is commonly served in hotels and restaurants, together with the sedentary habits, were not long in giving me dyspepsia and stomach trouble, which reduced my weight from 205 to 160 pounds.

"There was little relish in any food and none of it seemed to do me any good. It seemed the more I ate the poorer I got and was always hungry before another meal, no matter how much I had eaten.

"Then I commenced a trial of Grape-Nuts food, and was surprised how a small saucer of it would carry me along, strong and with satisfied appetite, until the next meal, with no sensations of hunger, weakness or distress as before.

"I have been following this diet now for several months and my improvement has been so great all the others in my family have taken up the use of Grape-Nuts with complete satisfaction and much improvement in health.

"Most people eat hurriedly, have lots of worry, thus hindering digestion, and therefore need a food that is predigested and concentrated in nourishment."

"There's a Reason."

Embroidered Boleros Pretty and Smart.

The fall and winter styles are, without question, a credit to their originators. Every woman wants to dress with refinement and style; and to keep up-to-date inexpensively in these days of rapid changes, it is almost necessary to do all one's own dressmaking. This is not difficult when a good pattern is used. For instance, the illustration here shown, Ladies' Home Journal Pattern No. 9089, is a fine example of up-to-dateness and smartness. This dress will be particularly welcome because of the ease and accuracy with which it can be made and adorned. The blue bird pattern, No. 11444, is delightful on it. It makes up charmingly in the new plaids in pruncile shades combined with voile or broadcloth. The pattern consists of a foundation waist opening in front, with full-length or shorter sleeves with circular cuffs. The scalloped sleeveless bolero falls over a deep girdle, while the three-piece skirt is completed by a tunic gathered at the waistline, and may be finished with or without the scalloped hem. Pattern cuts in sizes 32 to 42 inches, bust measure, requiring in size 36 5½ yards 36-inch plaid with 4½ yards 36-inch voile.

Patterns, 15 cents each, can be purchased at your local Ladies' Home Journal dealer or from The Home Pattern Company, 183 George Street, Toronto, Ontario.

VERY SUCCESSFUL FARMER.

Duke of Marlborough Helping to Solve the Food Problem.

On March 17, 1913, the Duke sent an open letter to Winston Churchill, then Home Secretary, condemning radical land measures, and announcing that he was about to put 1,000 acres of his estate, Blenheim Park, at Woodstock, under the plow. He outlined an alluring scheme of increasing the national food supply and cutting down the size of the army of the unemployed. Also he promised he would grant land for workmen's cottages.

The Duke kept his promise. The scheme worked out, and is working out far more successfully than the Government, and probably the Duke himself, had dreamed it would.

A little more than half a year after he had written his letter to Winston Churchill, the Duke ordered 1,000 acres of Blenheim Park to be plowed for the planting of cereals.

This ground produced its second harvest this year. The barley and oats are not quite equal in bulk to the crop of last year, but they bear about the same proportion to those that preceded them that the present harvest in general does to that of 1914, so the deficiency has a seasonal explanation.

The Duke of Marlborough's enterprise in restoring to cultivation a land that had been under grass for many years has aroused interest and approval throughout the British Isles, chiefly because he is pointing the way to modifications in farming that have good chances of helping to solve the problem of the home productions of breadstuffs and of increasing the nation's security from its own resources, a matter of vital importance to Britain.

The Duke showed considerable foresight in the working out of his plan. The land he converted into cereal producing farms is light. The turf it carried was of little value, its owner being strongly against disturbing rich pastures or meadows.

The Duke is keeping detailed records, and the books show that there is every justification for expecting better returns from the reclaimed area under the plow than it yielded in its former state.

The Duke has subjected the administration of the Blenheim farms to a thorough evolution along industrial lines, and the results are equally as interesting and instructive as the progress of the farming itself. Together with W. Gavin the Duke had introduced important reforms, resulting in the raising of heavier crops and pronounced improvement in the quality of the permanent pasture, leading to a great increase in the total head of stock carried.

On the lawns all around the palace sheep have been substituted for the mower, and when in June the grass was bare the scanty feed of the sheep was supplemented with cabbages grown in the flower beds.

BRITAIN'S GREAT RESOURCES.

Can Continue Fighting For a Long Time.

The British were not bankrupted by the Napoleonic wars, although the average income per head was only $75 and the taxes took $15 of it. The average income last year was $255 and the average per capita tax was only $17.50. The population has increased not quite two and a half times in the past hundred years and the national income has increased nine times, says the Philadelphia Ledger.

It is evident that the nation has resources enough to continue fighting a long time. It is evident, also, that the British citizen is willing to pay whatever taxes the Government may levy. He is reading the budget estimates with calmness and preparing to pay the new taxes as the price of success. While the Germans are talking of victory the British are preparing to spend their last shilling before they will surrender. Their ability to pay their share of the new loan floated in America is undoubted.

THE BELL-HORSE.

A necessary part of every Army mule-train is the bell-horse. He carries no burden save a great responsibility and a clear-sounding bell, and all mules destined to serve his Majesty are trained to follow him. A white animal is nearly always selected, as for some reason or other mules follow this color most faithfully.

Pack-mules become very much attached to the bell-horse of their train, and refuse to move either forwards or backwards if he is not leading. For this reason the death of the bell-horse is a great calamity.

On one occasion, in one of our Indian frontier wars, says London Answers, the whole mule-train came to a standstill owing to the death of the bell-horse. Nor would anything induce the animals to move till one of the officers substituted another white horse in the dead one's place. On seeing, as they thought, the old favorite in his place once more, all the mules moved forward to greet him, and only by driving the fraudulent bell-horse forward quicker than the mules could follow, was the deception kept up.

"My goodness, but Nerviline is a miracle-worker," writes Mrs. Charlotte Chipman, mother of a well-known family residing at Mount Pleasant. My joints were so stiff and the muscles so frightfully sore that I even cried at times with the pain. For years we have used Nerviline in our family and I just got busy with this wonderful, good old liniment. Lots of rubbing with Nerviline soon relieved my misery and I was in a real short time about my work as usual."

QUAKER WIT.

What He Advised a Lady to Do Get Warm.

"Somewhere in France" there is at work a group of English Quakers, whose cool courage and tireless devotion in rescuing and tending the wounded on many a battlefield have won them, despite their peace principles, the hearty respect and liking of both "Tommies" and "piou-pious." Among them is one young man whose ancestors have been notable more for wit and spirit than for the virtues oftenest associated with drab coats and broad hat brims.

It was a member of that family, a century or more ago, that found himself by chance in a carriage with a very fine lady attired in the low-necked, short-sleeved muslin dress then in the height of fashion, adorned by a profusion of jewels and trinkets, and protected only by a lace shawl as light as a cobweb. A chilly wind blew up suddenly, and she exclaimed, shivering, "What shall I do to get warm?"

"I really don't know," said the Quaker sympathetically, "unless thee put on another breastpin."

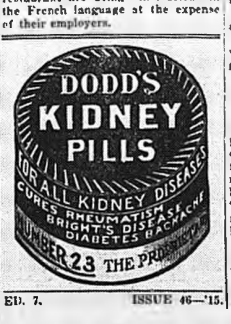
ELECTRIC FANS DID IT.

How Oriental Pasha Was Relieved of Mosquitoes.



A 'round-the-world electrical engineer tells this story, says G. T. Hadley in World Outlook:

"We ran up to Bagdad to put over a little deal with the Pasha, a former Government official who had been prominent in the days of Abdul Hamid. His palace was infested with mosquitoes, and we had to plan to give him relief.

"He lived in the usual Moorish house with high walls, flat roof with parapets, few windows and open court. The old Pasha looked exactly as if he had just stepped out of a Broadway musical comedy with his shining silk robes, turban and red shoes and upturned toes.

"In the palace garden was a stream with a fall of about 10 feet. It would develop about one-fourth horsepower. We built a water mill, equipped it with a dynamo, wired the palace and started up some gigantic electric fans. These fans cooled the air and also blew through the rooms a narcotic sufficiently powerful to cause the mosquitoes to fall in a coma. All that remained was for the servants to go around and sweep them up in piles to be destroyed."

WOMEN'S NATIONAL ANTHEM.

Dear Editor,—While in London recently I came in touch with a little incident, which I think will interest you.

I attended, one day, at noon, a recruiting meeting in front of the Mansion House. A great crowd of men and women listened to the recruiting sergeants, all of whom had "done their bit" at the front.

A lady, with a magnificent voice, sang patriotic songs, which perhaps were more effective than the speeches of the recruiting sergeants. At the close of the meeting, it was announced that after singing "The King," the lady would sing "The Woman's National Anthem."

Then, in splendid voice, she sang:

"God save our splendid men,
Send them safe home again;
God save our men.
Keep them victorious,
Patient and chivalrous,
They are so dear to us;
God save our men."

As she sang, every man stood, uncovered, and with bowed head, and there were not many dry eyes.

I think it would be a good thing if the women of Canada would learn this as "The British Women's National Anthem," for surely it is the prayer of every loyal British woman.

After the meeting, I went up to the singer, handed her my card, and asked her for the words she had just sung. When she saw that I was from Montreal, she said, "Oh, I sang in Montreal, and I will be glad to send the words to the women of Canada."

She wrote them on the back of the blue envelope which contained my passport.

Very truly yours,
A CANADIAN.

Novel Atomizer Size of Watch.

A recent novelty is a pocket atomizer in the shape of a watch. The head or top has a small orifice, and the spray is produced by pressing on the flexible metal sides. A miniature funnel is provided for the filling, which is done by unscrewing the head. Another atomizer consists of a small cylindrical pump mounted on a cork so as to fit into any bottle and thus avoid handling of the perfume from one bottle to another. A plunger at the top serves to produce the spray from a side orifice. The tube which descends into the liquid has a second or telescoping end so that the tube can be extended down as far as the bottom of the bottle and thus take up all the liquid.

DO THE PEOPLE REALIZE?

In the province of Ontario today there is a movement for the benefit of the people. Do the people realize that the movement means great things to them? They have a champion in Sir Adam Beck who is putting up a fight that is strong and bitter. Against him is arrayed the combined capital of the big railways and their friends. At present all steam roads are subsidized by the Government. This subsidy goes to the private corporations. If the Government can afford to subsidize these corporations then why cannot it afford to subsidize Hydro-Radial roads which will be owned by the people? Every ounce of pressure that can be brought to bear to defeat Sir Adam Beck's Hydro-Radial scheme of roads will be used. Beck is now fighting for the people. Will the people be true to Beck? Then opportunity lies before them. Every man who offers himself as a member for either the Dominion or Provincial parliament should be placed on record. It should be made clear whether or not he will support the subsidies now being asked for by the Hydro-Radial people. If he does not then the time has come when party politics should no longer hold any man. The corporations have too long dug in the flesh pots of the various governments. It is time that the people got an innings. Will the people seize their opportunity and be true to Beck?

It may mean that the breaking of party ties will bring a new party into existence. What if it does so long as the people get an innings? We hear much of assistance to good road schemes, but generally these good roads are running from one big city to another. Let us have Hydro-Radial roads that will penetrate the parts of the province that to-day receive no accommodation from the steam roads. If the people but follow the lead given them by Sir Adam Beck they will win. If they refuse and follow the party they will lose.

Why should you send a man to parliament who will not vote for your interests?

Think this matter over and be ready to pledge any man who seeks your suffrage on this question.—Kincardine Reporter.

—Lord Reading, one of Britain's representatives in the United States to negotiate the international loan, was once a poor, struggling attorney in London. While here he was asked to tell the secret of success. He said: "Know what you want. Keep your mind always on it. Face facts, but always remember that there is a bright side. Above all, keep the tightest control of yourself. Remember that work wins in the end. No success is won without it, and no success is worth having, unless honorably earned." This is worth remembering. It states some of the rules we ought to abide by.

—One result of the war is to give California, for the present, the Canadian market for raisins and figs. Valencia raisins this winter will not be obtainable, and the tough-skinned loose Muscatels coming from the Pacific Coast, are not altogether a satisfactory substitute. California figs also, both in quality and packing, are much inferior to those heretofore obtainable from the Mediterranean. This, however, is a minor grievance, as are most of the troubles visited have come upon Canada through the war.

—The reasons why Greece cannot easily ride against the sea-powers lies are something more than perverty, her coast-line and her tide-washed cities. Since the dawn of history Greece have been sailors. Their merchant fleet before the war was equal to Spain's and more than half Russia's. Only thirteenth of the nations in commerce, Greece was twelfth in the carrying trade, and is now ninth or better. The prospect of killing her shipping at one blow might chill as stout a heart as Constantine's.

CORN AND POTATO TESTS

The corn and potato variety test which was carried out in Bruce County is now complete although, owing to the wet season, the results are not of any great value. The tests will be conducted over a term of years, this year being the first. The idea is to see which varieties give best results in the various neighborhoods.

In the corn test, seven varieties of ensilage corn were given to each of the experimenters named below, sufficient seed to each to sow one-seventh of an acre of each variety, an acre in all: James A Lamb of Brant, T Malcolm of Kinloss, A D McKay of Bilerelle, Neil Grunder of Kincardine Tp, R Christie of Bruce Tp. The seed was planted in hills 36 to 42 in. apart, same number of kernels to each hill. The total crop was weighed, and then the cobs removed and weighed.

The corn results were as follows: 1. Compton's Early—yield per acre, 40,204 lbs; cobs, 11,279 lbs. 3. Golden Glow—yield, 35,689 lbs, cobs, 10,773 lbs. 3. Salter's North Dakota—yield, 35,393 lbs; cobs, 8,666 lbs. 4. Bailey—yield, 38,818 lbs; cobs, 9,926 lbs. 5. Longfellow—yield, 32,867 lbs; cobs, 8,015 lbs. 6. Wisconsin No. 7—yield, 32,363 lbs; cobs, 7,930 lbs. 7. White Cap, Yellow Dent—yield, 30,123 lbs; cobs, 9,574 lbs.—Telescope.

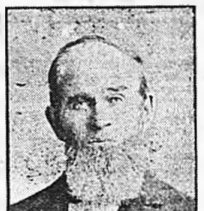
Canada Temperance Act Campaign Convention Call

We are living in strenuous days. Warfare on a scale never before known is being waged between belligerent forces; upon the issue hangs the fate of liberty and the rights of the weak.

This warfare is not confined to the armies whose blood is making red the soil of Europe. Peaceful, liberty-loving citizens the world over are waging a warfare in the interests of the weak against the heartless, Prussian-like liquor traffic that has no regard for the sanctities of the home, the welfare of the individual or the interest of the State. We in Bruce must "do our bit" and endeavor to keep our county in line with others that are sweeping the enemy before them.

A convention, therefore, of those interested in the temperance cause is hereby called to meet in the Sabbath School room of the Methodist Church, Chesley, on Monday, Nov. 22nd, at 11.30 a.m., to discuss the advisability of entering upon a Canada Temperance Act Campaign and to discuss such other questions as may come before the convention.

Rev. Ben. H. Spence, General Secretary, and Rev. J. Bailey, Field Secretary of the Dominion Alliance, Mr. A. T. Cooper, and Rev. E. G. Powell, President and Secretary of the Huron County Alliance are expected to be present and to take part in the convention.



The proceedings will be interspersed with solos by Master Willie Norris, the famous boy singer of Toronto.

Every church, Young People's Society and temperance organization should send at least two delegates.

Delegates who cannot return the same day will be billeted over night.

Signed on behalf of the Bruce County Temperance Alliance,

R. S. BRUCE, 1st Vice-Pres. H. B. PUTNAM, Secretary.

A GOOD MAN GONE

JOHN C. McINTYRE

Death came suddenly, but without suffering or anxiety, to one of the noblest and best of our pioneer residents. On Tuesday morning he arose and took his breakfast as usual, but about fifteen minutes later, while sitting in a chair, the last call came. He fell over in the chair and expired in a few minutes.

The funeral takes place from Knox church on Thursday afternoon. Service at 2 o'clock.

Reichstag Does Not Represent Germany

"If there was a just representation by population in the German Reichstag, the Socialists would be stronger than all the other parties combined, and there would be no German Emperor and no war today," asserted Prof. Reithdorf, formerly of Woodstock College, during an address in Toronto on "Germany's Political System." After outlining the way in which German-Americans had been hoodwinked by subsidized newspapers and given an entirely wrong conception of conditions in Germany, the speaker declared that he had a mission to inform the Canadians of German descent of the true state of affairs in Germany.

The manner in which the upper chamber is controlled by the Kaiser was exposed by Prof. Reithdorf, who stated that during fifty years the 54 men had passed every measure unanimously, showing the powerful manipulation of the Emperor. "There is one will behind," declared the speaker. "At one time it was that of Bismarck, and now it is that of William."

The equally lamentable state of affairs in the Reichstag, the machinations which had brought about the war, and central control were alike described by the speaker.

LOCAL AND DISTRICT NEWS

A Royal Ayrshire

Town Clerk J C Gibson purchased at Toronto Fair a fine prize-winning Ayrshire cow, which was recently shipped to him. Mr Gibson has for many years depended upon a Jersey milker for household supply of lactael food. Whether the product of the Ayrshire is of higher quality we cannot say, but the new "cow" is certainly of royal bovine blood.

Arrested for Stock-Selling Fraud

Charles A. Rontier was brought from Toronto to Walkerton by High Constable Briggs, charged with fraud, and after appearing before a magistrate was remanded for a week without bail. A warrant has been out for him for about two years, Rontier about three years ago sold to the Misses McKinnon, of Walkerton, some stock in a coal mine located near Orangeville, and was also successful in disposing of several lots to young women and widows. The mine turned out to be a hole in the ground into which, it is alleged, coal had been deposited and covered again.

Runaway on Queen St.

Frightened by the sound of an automobile horn a heavy team of farm horses that were being driven down street on Monday forenoon started off at a furious gallop from Inkerman St. crossing. The driver kept the team well under control considering the high speed, until one line broke. At Rose St. they swung around the corner, still going at race-course gait, but were abruptly halted when one horse slipped on the cement crossing, and fell across into the Royal Bank doorway, where it remained securely till until the harness was unloosed by spectators. No damage. What luck some men and horses have!

Hotel-Keeper Pays $1200 in Fines

W. W. Irwin, a Ripley hotelkeeper, was prosecuted before a Kincardine magistrate on Nov. 4th for selling liquor in the village, which is under local option. He pleaded guilty and was fined $400 and costs. On Nov. 5th Irwin was brought before Walkerton magistrates to answer two more charges of selling illegally in a dry municipality. He again admitted the offences and was fined $325 on the one charge and $500 on the other. The informations were laid by provincial constables Shirley and Ripley. Local option had almost become a dead by-law there of late, but an organized effort is being made to enforce the measure. Two men have also been fined for being intoxicated.

Of Value to a Paper

The newspaper man is blamed for a whole lot of things he can't help, such as using partiality in mentioning visitors, giving news about some folks and leaving others out, etc. He simply prints all the news he can find. Some people inform him about such things and others do not. An editor should not be expected to know the names and residences of all your uncles, aunts and cousins, even if he should see them on or off the train. Tell us about it. It's news that makes the newspaper, and every man, woman and child can be associate editor if they only will. Never apologize when you give this bit of information to an editor, for if there lives one so dead that he has lost his appreciation of such favors, he is dead indeed, to every virtue that imparts value to a paper.

Battalion for Huron and Bruce

The new regiment to be known as the Huron and Bruce is now in process of formation, and will be completed in the very near future if the military authorities give their approval. On Monday a committee of officers from both counties met in Wingham and decided to raise a regiment from the two counties, and all the local officers have offered their services. Recruiting leagues are to be formed at once, and the county councils of both counties will be asked to co-operate in the matter of finance by contributing $1000 each. Major Cassels is in charge of the Huron military officers and Major Hay for Bruce. The local offices do not anticipate any great difficulty in securing necessary volunteers. Major Hay, Dr. Houston and Lieut. Rickel, of Paisley, attended the committee meeting at Wingham.

Anonymous Letters on Overseas Recruiting

"An Old Soldier" writes a letter for publication to The Advocate, in which he calls upon farmers' sons to enlist. He comments upon the fact that those who have gone from Paisley are nearly all town boys, although the farmer boys, accustomed to outdoor life are better fitted to be soldiers, also that their farms are at stake in this contest. He says the farmers' sons claim they are wanted at home, but, nevertheless, they are ready to go on excursions to the North West, whether they are wanted at home or not. The writer concludes by saying, "Boys, if Germany wins this war she wants Canada, and Canadians would be under German rule." Another writer subscribing himself "Shrapnel" says: "I was struck, when saying good-by to the boys yesterday, with the number sent by Bruce County that is not credited to it, and asked why they went to other places to enlist. I found that a feeling existed that the officers of Bruce did not show such a burning desire to go to the front as was displayed by others." Either or both of these writers may feel aggrieved that we do not publish their epistles in full. If so, all we have to say is that when they wish to express their unreserved opinion upon public matters and at the same time take a "slam" at other people, writers should be bold enough to do so over their real signature, and let the other fellows know where the "slam" comes from. "An Old Soldier" should know no fear of his weapon acting like a boomerang, and "Shrapnel" usually explodes right out in the open.

The Late Robert Cassels

Another old pioneer has been called to his reward. On Monday, Nov. 8th, Mr. Robt. Cassells, who had suffered a stroke of paralysis in March and received a third stroke about six weeks ago, passed peacefully away. Deceased was born near Streetsville in Peel County in 1834, and came to Riderelle with his brother William at the age of 22, Robert taking up lot 11, con. 2, and William taking lot 10, con. 2. About an acre had then been cleared on each of these farms. A year after coming to Riderelle the subject of our sketch went back to Streetsville and was married, bringing his young bride back with him to the bush farm. Being industrious and frugal they soon were in comfortable circumstances, and eleven years ago sold the old homestead and moved to Chesley. Mr. Cassels had no taste for public life and in the township to which he lived so long refused to accept any position. He was also coming to Ellerslie and Chesley he had been a member of Knox church, Paisley, or Geneva church, Chesley, and was a kindly Christian gentleman. Three were born to Mr. and Mrs. Cassels a family of four, two of whom predeceased them. The remaining members are Miss Cassels at home and Dr. W. G. Cassels of Fairbanks, Alaska, who with the widow are left to sorrow over the departure of a good and kind father and husband. Politically Mr. Cassels was a staunch Liberal. The funeral on Wednesday to Chesley cemetery was attended by many old friends who took this opportunity of paying their last tribute of respect to this grand old pioneer.—Enterprise.

Private Mel. Davisonis Return to Chesley

The entire town of Chesley and large numbers from the surrounding townships turned out en masse on Tuesday to welcome home Pte. Mel. Davison, invalided home from the front, a relic of the Princess Pats. Pte. Davison enlisted with the 100th Grenadiers at Winnipeg, and was later transferred to the Princess Patricias, of which famous battalion only 72 remain at the front in France. His left lung was shattered by shrapnel on August 3rd, at Armentieres, France, and to day he was given papers by Lieut.-Col. Barlow, A.D.M.S., to go to the Graven-hurst Sanatorium for treatment. Davison was standing in a trench when a shell struck the sandbags in front of him, and pieces of the bag and steel penetrated his breast and lung, shattering his rib. He had five inches of rib removed. "Have you been discharged?" he was asked. "No chance. I am a convalescent and I get full pay and my wife will receive her separation allowance till I am able to leave the hospital. I expect it will be six months before I am better." "How many of the original Patricias are left?" "There were 72 when Premier Sir Robert Borden reviewed us in a little town near Armentieres last July. Out of this number only six had not been wounded, and and I was one of them, but I got mine within three weeks. I think all those who are alive, with the exception of the few in France, are home. The number who came back are few, though. The drafts from McGill University, that reinforced us are a fine body of men. I am sure they will uphold the honor and reputation of the regiment," said Davison. They joined us at Armentieres and were warmly welcomed." Chesley Citizens' Band, the high school cadets and thousands of cheering citizens took part in the welcome he was accorded. Pte. Davison is a nephew of Mr. Wm. Davison, of Inkerman St., Paisley.

—Northern Light Masonic Lodge, Kincardine, held a unique function, when two members were honored. They were James A. McPherson, ex-mayor of the town, and the oldest practising lawyer in Bruce, and Dr. Bradley, of Bervie. These men have belonged to the Lodge for the past 50 years, and the brethren gave them a supper and presented each with a pair of candlesticks. The occasion drew together a good crowd of Masons from the town and surrounding districts.

SEEKING TO INJURE WORK OF RED CROSS

Evidences of German secret service activity throughout Canada, seeking to injure the Canadian Red Cross Society, is thought to be the explanation of a series of widespread rumors and stories whose evident object is to interfere with the popularity of the society in the public mind, and to prevent, as far as possible, further contributions to its work. The stories generally take the form of a statement that the Red Cross is selling socks that have been knitted by persons who desire to contribute these to the soldiers, two of the commonest tales being that of a lumberman in Winnipeg who finds a card from the donor in the foot of one of a pair of socks he has bought, and the second that of an old lady of 80 living in the Niagara district who has knitted 100 pairs of socks, and in the last pair encloses a card of good wishes which a soldier who, according to the story, buys the socks at the front, acknowledges. So mischievous have the coiners of these stories been that Mr. Noel Marshall, chairman of the Canadian Red Cross, has personally offered a reward of $100 for the conviction of any person repeating this libel upon the society.

As a result of the series of stories, Mr. Noel Marshall has issued the following statement, which was at first intended for a branch of the Red Cross which had written to the head office of the society in reference to the rumors which his correspondent said were causing great annoyance to the workers as well as seriously injuring their work. The letter from Mr. Marshall, which shows how absolutely without foundation any such reports are, is in part as follows:

"Replying to your letter of the 18th inst., some secret services have been circulating all sorts of rumors through Canada for the past few months to the effect that the Canadian Red Cross Society were selling socks to the soldiers. On the 16th September last I cabled Commissioner Hodgetts as follows: 'It is currently reported that the Red Cross Society is selling socks and other goods to the soldiers. Is there the slightest particle of truth in such statement? Cable night letter that can be published.—Marshall.' In reply to this Gen. Hodgetts cabled as follows: 'Report that Red Cross is selling any supplies whatever preposterous.—Hodgetts.'

"There is not the slightest particle of truth in the statement that any goods have been sold. The Canadian Red Cross Society never has and never will sell supplies. It is our duty to give them to the various hospitals for the sick and wounded, and this we do. We have never sent any goods that were not up to standard. Anything of that class that has been received has been remade. Personally, I might say I shall be willing to give a reward of $100 for the conviction of any party repeating this libel on the society.

"The writer was in Quebec on Tuesday last and saw a number of the wounded men returning from France, and if the people of Canada could hear the kindly words that these men have to say of the Red Cross they would be amply repaid for all the work they are doing. (Signed) Noel Marshall."

Commenting further on this Mr. Marshall said: "When you consider that the organization has been running for nearly 15 months, and that there has never been a word of criticism of its work from the press, while there are always people ready to criticize if they get an opportunity, you will realize how the work is being done. Besides this, at every meeting where returned soldiers have spoken they have had nothing but the warmest praise for the Red Cross, and they would be the ones to tell if the work were not being carried on properly."

Mr. Marshall also pointed out that any suggestion that officers of the society receive any remuneration for their services is equally false, and he declared that no salaries whatever are paid to any officer, but merely to the necessary staff employed in handling the enormous quantities of supplies that are being received daily. On the contrary, he pointed out that many of the business men connected with the organization have almost entirely neglected their own business during the past year and more, and while they feel rewarded in the success of the work accomplished, it is peculiarly galling to be constantly subjected to criticism of uninformed persons, and those who cover their own unwillingness to contribute to the cause by attack on the administration of the Red Cross work.

Post Office Department,
Ottawa, Canada

The public is urged to take every care in packing parcels for the troops, as careful packing is absolutely essential to ensure delivery of the parcels in good order.

Parcels sent abroad require a higher standard of packing than is necessary in the Canadian Parcel Post, and this applies with even greater force to parcels for the troops. Those which are inadequately packed run great risk of damage or loss of contents.

Thin cardboard boxes, such as shoe boxes, and thin wooden boxes should not be used; nor does a single sheet of ordinary brown paper afford sufficient protection. The following forms of packing are recommended:

1. Strong, double cardboard boxes, preferably those made of corrugated cardboard, and having lids which completely enclose the sides of the boxes.
2. Strong wooden boxes.
3. Several folds of stout packing paper.
4. Additional security is afforded by an outer covering of linen, calico or canvas, which should be securely sewn up.

The address of the parcel should be written in ink on the cover, preferably in two places.

The address of the sender of the parcel should also be stated in order that it may be returned, if undeliverable. The contents of the parcel should be stated in writing on the cover.

In the case of parcels sent to the Mediterranean force, they should be very strongly packed. They should be as nearly round as possible and well padded with shavings, crumpled paper or other protective material. The outer covering should consist of strong linen, calico or canvas, and should be securely sewn up. The use of wooden or metal boxes with square corners is undesirable, as parcels so packed are liable to injure other parcels in transit. No perishable articles should be sent, and anything liable to become soft or sticky, such as chocolates, should be enclosed in tins. Parcels merely wrapped in paper or packed in thin cardboard boxes, such as shoe boxes, cannot be accepted.

Newspaper Space Costs Money, and It Should Be Paid for

(Collingwood Bulletin)

The Barrie Advance, commenting on the newspaper and the present position in respect to patriotic funds and movements, says: "For some time the Toronto dailies have been publishing an announcement that a charge would be made for the publishing of notices of meetings for societies and other events for which there is no admission fee. In other words, the free notices are to be a thing of the past as far as the Toronto dailies are concerned. In no other business is as much given for nothing as in the newspaper business. Announcements of meetings and a hundred and one other items are published as a "news item" that brings a reward in some measure to the person who has asked for the reading notice in the paper. This system has been in vogue as long as any living newspaperman can recollect. A person would never dream of going into a grocery store and asking for even an ounce of tea, or to a dry goods store and asking for enough ribbon for a badge—and not pay for it; but the newspaper is asked to give of its space for all kinds of schemes as an "item of news." Of course, the newspaper owners are to blame for this state of affairs. The owner of a paper that would lay down the rule that every notice of a meeting, or such item, must be paid for, would be a most unpopular individual for a time, at least, and if a local opponent was still willing to give free notice, his paper would get everything going. Did it ever appeal to you, gentle reader, in this light? Of course, there must be exceptions where such a rule need not be observed, but such cases would be rare. There is a vast difference between what is an item of news and what should be a paid reader. And there is but one way to overcome the trouble, and that lies with the newspaper owners, not so much collectively, but in every locality where there is newspaper competition."

The Muskrat of North America

The Water Rodent of our Marsh, Lake and Stream

The pelt of the muskrat is unquestionably the most serviceable and profitable of any of the fur bearers of North America. The muskrat makes his home in every state of the Union and every province of Canada. Only a few years ago the attempt was made to transplant and raise muskrat in Bohemia, and strange to say, in his new home, the muskrat soon degenerated into what we in America know as a common wharf rat with no value in his pelt as an article for furriers' use and a nuisance beyond control.

The writer, Mr. A. B. SHUBERT, President of A. B. SHUBERT, INC., Chicago, U.S.A., the largest house in the world dealing exclusively in American raw furs, made a personal investigation of the muskrat in Bohemia, visiting Prague and Smichow, in the neighborhood where the American muskrat was first planted. The geography of this country is about the same as some of the Northern States, the climatic conditions will compare very favorably with Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Wisconsin and Michigan and the temperature will average about the same.

The importation of the muskrat was manifestly made with the intention to settle the race in Bohemia and increase them, so as to cheapen the pelt that was imported from America. The animal got quickly acclimated and the number was greatly increased. Notwithstanding all this, it was made plain that the experiment was a failure from a commercial point of view. Why the animal should so deteriorate in the quality of its fur no one as yet has been able to explain and the only explanation that Mr. Schubert could give was that it was possible caused by the fact that the American muskrat could not understand the German language.

The People in Paisley and Vicinity want to Spend Money

MONEY is for use, not for hoarding. Most of us want what money will buy more than money, so we are always spending our money. Also, most of us do not make enough money to keep or hoard it—we must spend it on necessities.

Much Paisley money is spent with firms outside of this community—with the big city mail-order houses; money that ought to be spent at home.

More money would be spent in Paisley if more of our merchants would advertise, and if those who do advertise would advertise more.

To the People in and About Paisley

Spend your money in Paisley. Sending money out of this community makes the community poorer for you and everybody else. Building up outside businesses won't help you any.

WOMAN IN TERRIBLE STATE

Finds Help in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Cape Wolfe, Canada—"Last March I was a complete wreck. I had given up all hope of getting better or living any length of time, as I was such a sufferer from female troubles. But I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and today I am in good health and have a pair of twin boys two months old and growing finely. I surprised doctors and neighbors for they all know what a wreck I was.

"Now I am healthy, happy and hearty, and owe it all to Lydia E. Pinkham's remedies. You may publish this letter if you like. I think if more women used your remedies they would have better health."—Mrs. J. T. COOK, Lot No. 7, Cape Wolfe, P.E.I., Canada.

Because your case is a difficult one, and doctors having done you no good, do not continue to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It surely has remedied many cases of female ills, such as inflammation, ulceration, displacements, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, and it may be exactly what you need.

The Pinkham record is a proud and peerless one. It is a record of constant victory over the obstinate ills of women—ills that deal out despair. It is an established fact that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has restored health to thousands of such suffering women. Why don't you try it if you need such a medicine?

Selected Recipes.

Souffle of Duck.—Two cups cooked duck meat, cut very fine; two ounces boiled rice, one ounce butter, salt and pepper to taste, one tablespoon parsley, minced fine, and one-half cup stock. Mix well and pass through sieve. Add yolks of four eggs and stiffly beaten whites of two. Stir and pour into well-buttered mold and bake a nice brown. Serve hot.

Prune Charlotte.—Wash prunes thoroughly in many waters, soak over night in slightly sweetened water, and simmer (not boil) on back of stove until tender. Soak two tablespoons of gelatin in a little water, and add to it one cup boiling prune juice, sweetened to taste. Line mold with slices of stale, light cake, fill with prunes, pour in juice and set aside to harden. Serve with whipped cream and sugar.

Dried Pea Soup.—After washing, soak two cups of dried green peas in five cups of water over night, adding pinch of soda. Rinse in morning and put on to cook in fresh water with extra bones left from duck, or from roast, one celery root, two diced carrots, small piece of bacon or sausage and seasoning. Boil gently until peas are done. Take out bones and celery, mash peas and carrots through colander and return to strained liquor. A piece of boiling beef may be cooked with peas, and serve as a meat course, with celery, diced.

English Hot-Pot.—Cut two pounds of shoulder or best part of neck of mutton or lamb into pieces convenient for serving and wipe each piece over with a damp cloth. Peel and slice over two onions and peel and cut into "chunky" pieces six or eight potatoes. Dip each piece of meat into mixture composed of one tablespoon flour, one level teaspoon salt and one-third teaspoon pepper. Put layer of potato into bottom of deep baking dish or casserole, add layer of floured meat, then some onion and so on until dish is full, with potatoes on top. Add cold water until dish is almost full and bake in moderate oven three hours. One or two lamb kidneys improve flavor for most persons.

Braized Duck.—Fry two slices of salt pork until well tried out, and in resulting fat cook one tablespoon each of diced celery, carrot and turnip and one teaspoon each of parsley and onion. After five minutes add one rounding tablespoon butter, lay duck in pan, arranged as if for roasting, but not stuffed, and turn until well browned. Place on trivet in large sauce pan, pour over fat and fried vegetables and one pint boiling water. Cover closely and bake in slow oven, adding more liquid if needed. When partly done add two tablespoons finely chopped orange rind. For sauce strain liquid in pan, remove fat, and thicken with brown flour. Garnish dish with overlapping slices of orange peel which has been heated in gravy. This way of cooking makes a tender dish of an old bird. Young ducks should be roasted.

Smothered Round Steak.—Try out on hot iron frying pan three thin slices of fat salt pork, three by four inches, and add one onion peeled and cut in thin slices. Cook, stirring constantly until brown. Wipe two and one-half pound slice of round steak, put in frying pan, pour over one and one-fourth teaspoon salt. Bring quickly to boiling point, cover closely, remove to back of range and let simmer slowly until tender. Remove steak to hot platter and strain stock. There should be one cupful. Melt one tablespoon butter, add two tablespoons flour, stir until blended and pour hot stock on gradually, while stirring constantly. Let boil two minutes, season with salt and pepper, pour over and around steak, and serve surrounded with stuffed baked tomatoes and overlapping slices of tomato with sprigs of parsley in centre.

Home Hints.

People are very apt to use more sugar than they need in cooking.

Batter puddings are quite light made with part water instead of all milk.

Linen should have a long soaking before washing, if you wish it to look nice.

A stovepipe can be cut with the help of a can-opener exactly as you would cut a can.

A pinch of bicarbonate of soda added to stewed fruit makes it possible to use less sugar.

If there is a fruit stain on a garment, pour boiling water through the stain until it disappears.

To remove marks of paint, rub them with a cut lemon.

To freshen stale bread, dip it in milk for a minute, then rebake between tins in slow oven.

Putting a coat of varnish on your linoleum each year will preserve it and make it look bright.

Joints cooked in casserole do not waste nearly so much as those cooked in the ordinary way.

When making a cake always mix the spices and baking powder with the flour before it is sifted.

By keeping household supplies always on hand a great deal of the sense of rush and weariness is saved.

If the soup stock is thin, there is nothing that will add more richness of flavor than tomatoes and a good quantity of butter.

Pour boiling water over the raisins and let them stand a minute; then pour off and you can pinch the seeds off at each end.

All of the strips of fat left from a steak should be left in a dish and tried out in the oven. They will make excellent fat for frying.

Granulated sugar makes a coarse grained cake, powdered sugar a fine one, but a moist, light brown sugar is one of the best kinds to use.

In pressing silk or satin do not use a very hot iron nor dampen them. Lay some clean, dry muslin over the seams and press with a warm iron.

Instead of melting butter when you want to mix it with sugar, place the butter in a double boiler and allow it to get warm. It will beat up very easily with the sugar, and will not cause the cake to be heavy.

Good living is as much a case of careful planning as it is of spending money. Think before you buy, and do not put off planning a meal until almost mealtime. Haste in this, as in anything else, means waste.

STUDY YOUR TEMPERATURE.

Anybody Can Read a Clinical Thermometer.

In health, the temperature of the Eskimo at the Pole and the Zanzibarian at the Equator differs not by a single degree.

In fact, there are only ten degrees between health and certain death. The temperature of the atmosphere sometimes varies forty degrees in twenty-four hours. No such variation occurs in the body.

Put a clinical thermometer—you can buy a good one cheap—into your mouth, and leave it there several minutes. Now examine it. If it does not stand—i.e., the mercury, of course—at about 98.6 there's something wrong with you. Doctors call that point "normal." That's when they let you sit up and talk when you have been ill in bed.

The range of a clinical thermometer is from 95 to 110 degrees. These points mark the extremes. Life is impossible outside those limits. Anybody can take a temperature, and read a clinical thermometer as well as the most skilful doctor. Thus, anyone can tell whether he is in normal health, or in need of more or less attention.

If everybody kept a clinical thermometer it would be an absolutely unerring guide as to when to call the doctor—99 degrees, nothing worth a thought. 101, be a trifle careful. 102, stay indoors and keep out of draughts; 105, go to bed instantly and send for the doctor.

In fact, you might do a great deal worse than to send for him if it showed a temperature of 103.

STATISTICS OF THE WAR.

An Answer That "Germany Has Shot Her Bolt."

The statisticians are naturally figuring all the time and giving their results to the public. The latest is that the combined population of Germany and Austria at the beginning of the war was 121,000,000, of which 45 per cent. were Austrian and 55 per cent. German.

The Germans claim that of these there are about 24,000,000 men between the ages of 18 and 45. Of this number 75 per cent. are available for war purposes, or about 16,000,000. As a matter of fact, eliminating the unfit of various descriptions, this would make about 12,000,000 actually available. Of these, it is estimated that 5,200,000 have been permanently removed from the firing line, leaving a balance of 6,800,000, and of these at least 1,500,000, or about 7,500 to the mile, will be required to hold the Western front, and 2,500,000 to hold the Russian front with 500,000 on other fronts, leaving Germany and Austria a reserve force of 2,200,000. This vast reserve is the answer that the Teutons make to the allegation that "Germany has shot her bolt."

They say they can go into winter quarters with comfortable anticipations of what they may be able to do next spring.

If a woman nags her husband it's up to him to supply her with plenty of cause.

HAVE NEW TRENCH WEAPON.

Is Made From Shrapnel Case at Cost of $1.25.

The French troops are using a new bomb thrower of extreme simplicity, with which they are obtaining remarkable results, according to experts who have seen them at work. This weapon, which is known as the "crapouillot," consists of a shrapnel shell case mounted on a wooden stand, with a spike in front to anchor it firmly. The case of the shrapnel shell remains intact after it has been fired, as its object is to act like a little cannon; its end opens and the chrapnel with which it is crammed is driven out by a charge of powder at the bottom of the case. These shrapnel cases are carefully picked up by the French to be used against the enemy. They are cut down and a touch-hole is bored in them.

The cost of the finished bomb thrower does not exceed $1.25, and its weight is negligible. A charge of powder is poured into the shell case and a bomb well loaded with explosives placed upon it. The charge is fired by the touch-hole and the bomb is thrown into the air; it turns clumsily over and over like a large sausage, but it finds its target with remarkable accuracy.

When in the vicissitudes of battle the Germans succeed in capturing a front trench their communique not infrequently dignifies these bomb throwers with the name of guns. People read that ten, twenty or thirty guns have been captured, and never for a moment suppose that these insignificant trench mortars are meant.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, NOVEMBER 21.

Lesson VIII.—Jonah a Missionary to Nineveh. Jonah 3. 1 to 4. 11.

G. T.—Matt. 28: 19, 20.

I. Jonah Goes to Nineveh (Verses 1-4).

Verse 2. Preach unto it—Jonah was not a novice at preaching. He was chaplain to Jeroboam the second (2 Kings 14. 25).

3. Three days' journey—That is, twelve hours of the day.

II. The Ninevites Repent (Verses 5-10).

5. Believed God—Not only because they were religious, but because Jonah mightily stirred them.

They proclaimed a fast—This was not official, but a spontaneous response to the religious fervor created by Jonah's preaching.

6. The tidings reached the king—Just as the preaching of John the Baptist and of Jesus came to the ears of the Herods.

Laid his robe from him—A king with his robe on at a time of religious upheaval is about as incongruous as a woman in party dress at a revival meeting. The Spirit has a subduing effect, and pomp and display disappear.

7. Neither man nor beast—Showing the intensity of the revival. Even the brute creation was to be affected. Compare Rom. 8. 22.

10. God repented of the evil—A broken and contrite heart God will not despise. He cannot visit anger on the repentant (see Psa. 34. 18).

SURGICAL MIRACLES.

Remarkable Operations Are Now Performed.

War will lose half its terrors if surgery continues to make the rapid progress of the past few years, for arms and legs will be replaced by new ones when necessary.

A millionaire lost an ear in an accident, and offered $5,000 to anybody who would supply the missing article. A man agreed; the patients were placed side by side for eleven days, which completed the grafting process.

In another case, a whole finger is said to have been transferred from one woman to another, the hands being bound together for twenty-two days. The fee was $500, but the new finger was somewhat shorter than the original member.

America is the home of remarkable surgical operations, says London Answers, and it was at St. John's Hospital, New York, that a man, whose face had been badly injured in machinery, was supplied with a new nose and mouth, both quite serviceable. The operation was a lengthy one; grafted muscles and skin formed the mouth, and by careful and skilful operations the little finger replaced the nose.

British surgeons can be quite as clever when necessity arises. A man was badly wounded in South Africa, and lost most of his ribs, which were replaced by a steel jacket which allowed him to do light work. Then a London hospital took him in hand, and provided him with a set of silver ribs.

A small boy had what amounted to a hole in his skull, caused by a fall when very young. The London surgeons replaced this by a piece of his shin-bone, and the operation proved successful.

Wounds from bullets and knives in hearts have been sewn up; a weak aorta was strengthened by a silver spring being placed in it at the weak point; a pig's eyelid replaced one which had been removed; a broken back has been set; and the story goes that a blind man was made to see by transplanting a cornea.

WHAT YOUR WATCH WANTS.

Should Wind It in the Morning, Not at Night.

"Oh, yes," said a well-known watchmaker, "a great deal depends upon how you treat a watch as to the quality of service it gives.

"For instance, always wind the watch in the morning, and not at night. Directly after winding a watch works best, and can thus stand the constant movements of its wearer during the day. Another good tip is to wind a watch slowly, carefully avoiding jerks.

"During the night you should keep a watch in much the same position as it has occupied during the day. A watch worn in the pocket during the day should not be laid down flat at night. In the same way, a watch that spends its days in a warm pocket should not rest on the marble slab of a washstand at night.

"Oh, and clean out the pocket in which you carry your watch, or dust is certain to find its way into the works."

Teachers Get Pensions.

School teachers who serve in the British navy or army during the war may reckon the period of such service as equivalent to service in a Public elementary school for pension purposes.

TWO LEADING GERMAN GENERALS

FALKENHAYN A STRATEGIST, MACKENSEN A TACTICIAN.

They Are Very Different as Soldiers and Also as Men—Two Generals Contrasted.

Falkenhayn to plan and Mackensen to do. The sentence gives the German conception of these soldiers when the "drive" of the Russians was in full swing. It affords an insight into the characters of the men besides—their characters as soldiers, for as men they present contrasts indeed. Falkenhayn is a strategist and Mackensen a tactician. Eric von Falkenhayn, chief of the general staff in Berlin, is a conspicuous figure at the court of William II., a statesman as well as a soldier, enjoying the confidence of both the Emperor and the Crown Prince. August von Mackensen is noted as a cavalry officer and a specialist, like Hindenburg, in manoeuvres. Horses are the hobby of Von Mackensen, who always complains that the Germans think too much of big guns. Mackensen is one of the gods of the Hussars of the Death's-Head, the regiment with which the Crown Prince was connected for so long a time.

Falkenhayn has travelled more widely. Mackensen has the build of the Saxon. Falkenhayn is more variable in his moods. He traces his ancestry quite far back to Bohemian magnates and a branch of his family still flourishes in Austria. Mackensen is very much the elder of the two, having long passed his sixtieth year. Falkenhayn is a little past 50, and is the youngest Minister of War Germany ever had.

Falkenhayn Unbending.

That stamp of firmness and decision which the military life of Berlin imparts to the character of a man is discerned by a writer in the Paris Gaulois in every pose and gesture of Von Falkenhayn. The intimacy between himself and the Emperor by no means implies that the chief of the general staff is a puppet. He has not the disposition that accommodates itself to another's. Nor could he conceal his contempt for unsound strategy, though it were the Kaiser's. There may be truth in a report that he and the Emperor have quarrelled, we read, but it by no means follows that they have permanently parted company. The explosive nature of William II. is consistent with the keenest appreciation of capacity in a soldier, and while he has had sharp discussions with his commanders, he does not part with them for any mere assertion of their opinions and plans. Falkenhayn is the least conciliatory of all the great military magnates at the court of Berlin. He is absolutely without the gift of dissumulation.

Mackensen impresses the French press as apt for what they call "finesse." He has the mind of the commander who plays tricks upon a foe, manoeuvres him into impossible and untenable corners, fights a battle as if it were a game of chess. He has the quiet firmness in giving orders, the unruffled pose at headquarters, and the coolness that belong to that type of military genius.

Mackensen Quiet.

He has given little evidence, at least, to the writers in the French press, of the genius that can play a campaign from a broad strategical standpoint like Falkenhayn. In execution, however, he is unsurpassed. Nor is he committed to any form of tactics, like Hindenburg of the lakes. Mackensen is a cavalry officer, indeed, but the French do not discern in him the dash of the cavalryman. He is too quiet for that. He lacks the Prussianism of Falkenhayn, having been brought up on the estate of his father, who was a territorial aristocrat in Saxony and an authority on political economy and administration. The youth moved in civilian circles and married into the Prussian junker class. His home is usually in Danzig. When the Crown Prince was banished to that city, he found Mackensen a difficult proposition. The heir to the throne was treated with all the deference due to his high rank but he found "house arrest" a real thing.

GERMAN DENSITY.

A Hug Professor's Opinion of Niagara Falls.

The following story told by Mr. Andrew Carnegie illustrates the density of the German mind. Long before the war he was once travelling with a German financier, and together they went to Niagara Falls. The wonderful scene sent Mr. Carnegie into raptures of praise, but the German merely looked stolidly on and said nothing. Mr. Carnegie was astonished at such indifference, and, hardly able to contain himself, he turned to his companion and said: "Don't you think that's a wonderful sight?" "What?" asked the German. "Why, that gigantic body of water pouring over that precipice?" The German stared silently at one of the most extraordinary sights in nature, and then he looked up blankly and asked: "Why, what's to hinder it?"

LEST WE FORGET!

The Story of Infamy and Wrong Perpetrated by the German Soldiery in the Plains of Flanders, Valleys of the Vosges and the Rolling Fields of the Marne.

In post-offices throughout England one finds small 12-page pamphlets, entitled "Germany's Dishonored Army." They are circulated by the Parliamentary Recruiting Committee and are free to the public. In occasional, very occasional, bookstalls, one finds leaflets of the Union of Democratic Control and other such parlfiat organizations, also free to the public. The Government pamphlet contains additional records of German atrocities in France extracted from the report of Professor J. H. Morgan, commissioned by the Secretary of State for Home Affairs to investigate the alleged breaches of the laws of war by German troops in France. When the time comes for peace terms, pacifists and sentimentalists will raise their voices, pleading for the enemy. There must be no leniency, no sacrifice of civilization to barbarians. When peace comes, peace terms must be secured which will insure as far as is humanly possible the freedom of the world from tyranny and greed and lust and oppression.

Protection, Not Revenge.

The Parliamentary pamphlet might well have been headed "Lest We Forget." Those who read it and remember—they can hardly forget—will demand of Germany a settlement which shall leave her too broken to dare to disturb Europe again. They will demand an atonement—not in the spirit of revenge, but for the spirit that the law demands the punishment of the criminal—for the protection of humanity.

It is a colossal report, although not more dreadful than those of the Bryce Committee or the Belgian Committee. The result is to confirm the conviction that German atrocities were the result of deliberate military policy. Professor Morgan presents extracts from German diaries to prove that the killing of defenceless British and French wounded, the slaughter of civilians, and the destruction of towns were all the deliberate outcome of calculated policy.

One damning brigade order reads: "To date from this day no prisoners will be made any longer. All the prisoners will be executed. The wounded, whether armed or defenceless, will be executed. Not a man will be left alive behind.

Revolting Record.

As to the outrages upon women by German soldiers, "they have been so frequent," Professor Morgan writes, "that it is impossible to escape the conviction that they have been condoned and indeed encouraged by German officers. As regards this matter I have made a most minute study of the German occupation of Bailleul. This place was occupied by a regiment of German Hussars in October for a period of eight days. During the whole of that period the town was delivered over to the excesses of a licentious soldiery and was left in a state of indescribable filth.

"There were at least thirty cases of outrages on girls and young married women, authenticated by sworn statements of witnesses and generally by medical certificates of injury. It is extremely probable that, owing to the natural reluctance of women to give evidence in cases of this kind, the actual number of outrages largely exceeds this. Indeed, the leading physician of the town, Dr. Bels, puts the number as high as sixty. At least five officers were guilty of such offences, and where the officers set the example the men followed. The circumstances were often of a peculiarly revolting character; daughters were outraged in the presence of their mothers, and mothers in the presence or the hearing of their little children.

Hunted in Couples.

"In one case, the facts of which are proved by evidence which would satisfy any court of law, a young girl of nineteen was visited by one officer while the other held her mother by the throat and pointed a revolver, after which the two officers exchanged their respective roles. After the outrage they dragged the girl outside, and asking her if she knew of any other young girls ("jeunes filles") in the neighborhood, adding that they wanted to do to them what they had done to her.

"The officers and soldiers usually hunted in couples, either entering the houses under pretence of seeking billets, or forcing the doors by open violence. Frequently the victims were beaten and kicked, and invariably threatened with a loaded revolver, if they resisted. The husband or father of the women and girls were usually absent on military service; if one was present he was first ordered away under some pretext; and disobedience of civilians to German orders, however improper, is always punished with instant death. In several cases little children heard the cries and struggles of their mother in the adjoining room, to which she had been carried by a brutal exercise of force. No attempt was made to keep discipline, and the officers, when appealed to for protection, simply shrugged their shoulders.

"The German troops were often drunk and always insolent. But, [illegible] long enough, the bonds of discipline [illegible] were tightened at will, and hardly a single straggler was left behind.

"Deliberate Defilement."

Dealing with the subject of private property, and after recounting the destruction and pillage which everywhere marked the German presence, the professor concludes:—"I should like to draw the attention of the reader to some unpleasant facts which throw a baneful light on the temper of German officers and men. If one thing is more clearly established than another by my inquiries among the officers of our staff and divisional commands, it is that chateaux or private houses used as the headquarters of German officers were frequently found to have been left in a state of bestial pollution, which can only be explained by gross drunkenness or filthy malice. Whichever be the explanation, the fact remains that, while to use the beds and the upholstery of private houses as a latrine is not an atrocity, it indicates a state of mind sufficiently depraved to commit one. Many of these incidents, reinted to me by our own officers from their own observations, are so disgusting that they are unfit for publication. The point to deliberate defilement."

The Worst Not Told.

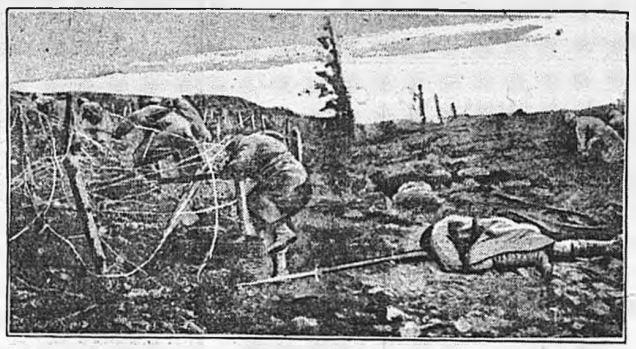
Under the heading: "Methods of Savages," the report reads:—

"The public has been shocked by the evidence, accepted by Lord Bryce's Committee as genuine, which tells of such mutilations of women and children as only the Kurds of Asia Minor had been thought capable of perpetrating. But the Committee were fully justified in accepting it—they could not do otherwise—and they have by no means published the whole. Pathologists can best supply the explanation of these crimes. I have been told by such that it is not at all uncommon in cases of rape or sexual excess to find that the criminal when satiated by lust, attempts to murder or mutilate his victim. This is presumably the explanation—if one can talk of explanation—of outrages which would otherwise be incredible. The Committee hint darkly at perverted sexual instinct. Cases of sodomy and of the rape of little children did undoubtedly occur on a very large scale. Some of the worst things have never been published.

Story of Infamy and Wrong.

"There is very strong reason to suspect that young girls were carried off to the trenches by licentious German soldiery, and there abused by the hordes of savages and licentious men. People in hiding in the cellars of houses have all heard the voices of women in the hands of German soldiers crying all night long until death or stupor ended their agonies.

"One of our officers, a subaltern in the sappers, heard a woman's shrieks in the night coming from behind the German trenches near Richebourg l'Avoue. When we advanced in the morning and drove the Germans out, a girl was found lying naked on the ground 'pegged out' in the form of a crucifix. I need not go on with this chapter of horrors. To the end of time it will be remembered, and from one generation to another, in the plains of Flanders, in the valleys of the Vosges and on the rolling fields of the Marne, the oral traditions of men will perpetuate this story of infamy and wrong.



Pride of Insolence.

"Although I have some claims to write as a jurist, I have here made no attempt to pray in aid The Hague Regulations in order to frame the counts of an indictment. The Germans have broken all laws, human and divine, and not even the ancient freemasonry of arms, whose honorable traditions are almost as old as war itself, has restrained them in their brutal and licentious fury. It is useless to attempt to discriminate between the people and their rulers: an abundance of diaries of soldiers in the ranks shows that all are infected with a common spirit. That spirit is pride, not the pride of pure and high endeavor, but the pride of insolence which knows no pity and feels no love. Long ago Rennn warned Strauss of the canker which was eating into the German character. Pedants indicriminated it; generals instilled it; the Emperor preached it. The whole people were taught that it was a normal state of civilization, that lust of conquest and the arrogance of race were the most precious of the virtues. On this Dead Sea fruit the German people have been fed for a generation until they are rotten to the core."—The Toronto Daily News.

Killed on British Railroads.

The British Board of Trade figures for a year, not including the most recent railway disaster, in which nearly 300 persons lost their lives, show that on the 23,700 miles of railway in the United Kingdom during the year covered by the report 125 passengers were killed while 2,440 were injured. Of railway employees, 425 were killed in this period and 5,065 injured. This is a vastly worse showing than ever before, a fact due perhaps to the changes in servants and schedules owing to the war.

INTO PROMISED LAND—TO REDEEM ALSACE

At last the soldiers of France are sighting their Promised Land—the ravished provinces which they have sworn to redeem from the hold of the Huns. This wonderful photograph, reproduced from Jai Yu, shows how the French Armies of the Vosges have won their way through the barbed death-traps and grim desolation of a shell-swept zone. "A loud cheer hails our victory. The crest of Lorraine is ours! Now to reclaim the fair plains of Alsace."

NEW LIQUOR RULES.

Early Closing and Restrictions Felt in Berlin.

The restrictions regarding the sale of distilled liquors in Greater Berlin, which were proposed in August by Police President von Jagow to the governing authorities, have gone into effect. They are so drastic that landlords and distillers are in despair, and the general public feels that its indulgence in "schnapses" and similar drinks is to be very largely curtailed.

The rules now laid down forbid the sale of distilled liquor except between 9 a.m. and 9 p.m., the sale in restaurants having woman waitresses and barmaids, the sale in "automatic" restaurants and the sale to drunken persons. The liquor may be sold only for cash and must be drunk on the premises.

Only casual examinations of the new rules does not reveal how drastic they are. Relatively few persons, because of the late working and eating hours in Berlin, have either desire or opportunity to indulge in spirituous liquors until after the new closing hour. Scores of reputable restaurants and cafes now have female employees in the place of the waiters who have been drawn into the army, and therefore these cafes are barred from making their formal profitable sales. The provision that the liquor must be drunk on the premises deals a blow to a bottle trade that heretofore has assumed considerable proportions, especially in the less pretentious cafes and saloons. Virtually the only provision to which there is no objection is that governing sales to drunken persons.

President von Jagow's suggestion anent the restriction of distilled liquors included the provision that none should be sold after 7 p.m., and that only liquor of a comparatively high grade and cost might be dispensed.

The distillers and liquor dealers breathed easier when they heard that the authorities did not favor anything so drastic, but all their hopes vanished when the authorities finally did make public their new regulations. It is asserted on every side that many cafes that do not specialize in beer—the so-called "wine rooms"—will now have to close at 9 instead of at 11 or 1 o'clock, and that many of them will have to go out of business.

These cafe proprietors allege that they cannot understand the new order nor the reasons for it. For months now it has been forbidden to serve soldiers or sailors with distilled liquors, and they say that therefore there is no military need for the rules. They maintain that there is a great sufficiency of liquor for army, medicinal and hospital needs now on hand, so that there is no necessity for extra measures to conserve the supply in this dramatic way. Also, they assert with the utmost positiveness that Berlin suffers not at all from any undue indulgence in liquor which would require correction through restriction of the supply.

KING GEORGE AND THE TOWER.

Much Improved By Valuable Gifts From His Majesty.

Rich as the Tower of London has always been in armor, it has, only recently, been very much improved by valuable gifts from King George V.

The King was told that he possessed in Windsor Castle certain pieces of very old armor which really formed parts of Tower suits, and, he accordingly gave orders that these should be sent to the City, so as to complete the sets there. The armor is very old indeed, having belonged to King Henry VIII., William Somerset, the Earl of Worcester, and others. The helmet of the latter warrior alone weighs close on twenty pounds.

These additions are by far the finest made to the Tower armories since the year 1661, when the whole collection was brought from Greenwich, Hampton Court, and other palaces, and placed in its present position. Amongst some of the special suits now to be seen is one which is attributed to King Charles I.

Pluck is all right, but good luck often leaves it at the post.

HOLLAND HAS BIG PROBLEM.

Belgian Women Want to Be Near Interned Relatives.

There are about twenty thousand Belgian girls and women who consider themselves, and are considered by those who have taken a first fond glimpse at their plight, the most unhappy creatures in the world.

They are the wives, daughters, sweethearts and sisters of Belgian soldiers interned in Holland. Women without a country these are, but more —women without a home, with little food and less clothing. Their husbands, fathers or brothers are alive and unharmed, idling most of their time away in Dutch prison camps. There will be no union until the war is over.

Under cover of night, in disguise, or on the strength of heart stirring pleas hundreds of these homeless women have managed to get across the border line to be near their interned men folk. Once on Dutch territory they become an increased burden to Holland. The problem of the interned Belgians and their needy women folk has become tragic. Among the charity organizations occupied in relief is the Society of Friends, through its War Victims' Relief Committee.

The principal task is to find useful employment. There are four principal camps in Holland under military control, each caring for 5,000 refugees.

At one of the smaller camps in Gouda the refugees are housed in the green-houses on an abandoned market garden. "It is sad to see strong young men sleeping in the day time or lounging about with no occupation," said one of the visitors who recently returned from Holland. Big wooden sheds form the "homes" of families at the other camps, and everywhere must be seen attempts to establish a sort of home atmosphere.

Conditions are found to be worst at Amersfoort, where about 13,000 Belgian soldiers are interned. The several hundred women who succeeded in evading the German authorities are in dire distress. Only a very small daily dole is theirs, and no provision is made for their lodgings. Some three hundred of these women live in an empty granary lent by a charitable Dutch merchant.

Belgian carpenters are now making neat, portable wooden houses, a great improvement on the barracks. After the war they propose to take these houses to Belgium. There are already workshops for tailors, shoemakers, basketmakers and other trades. In one the old tins used in the camps are converted into coffee and milk cans. Classes have been started in mat and slipper making.

TOYING WITH DESTINY.

German Newspaper Does Plain Speaking for the People.

Here is an extract from the Frankfurter Zeitung on the domestic problems of Germany in war time.

The Imperial Secretary of State himself admits that the Government is very late, too late, in fact, in the adoption of practical measures for dealing with the economic situation. The consequence of this policy of delay is that it is now well-nigh impossible to do anything to bring down the prices of commodities from their terrific height.

The influence of this state of affairs, further aggravated as it is by the intense rivalry of interests which the war has caused in trade circles, cannot fail to produce an adverse effect on the health of the people, who are being gradually driven to a makeshift existence.

These rival interests, it is saddening to see, are receiving most unjustifiable support in the Prussian Parliament, and, also, as in the recent discussions, have shown, in the Prussian Ministry of Agriculture.

How can this toying with the destinies of the nation be permitted?

SOLDIERS OF WAR IN MANY LANDS

SOME CURIOUS ARMY CORPS IN VARIOUS COUNTRIES.

Servian Cavalry Regiment With Two Men on Each Animal.

It is abroad that we find the most romantic and picturesque of military bodies; but there are quasi-military organizations in Great Britain which are not included in the Army List, and which, although the man in the street is to-day far more learned in regard to military matters than he was a few weeks ago, are probably quite unknown to many people, says London Answers.

Our Bodyguard of Gentlemen-at-Arms, the "Yeoman Warders of the Tower," and the King's Indian Bodyguard are fairly familiar to Londoners; but how many have heard of the corps of local Highlanders which springs into existence to guard the ruling Sovereign whenever he visits Balmoral? It is a corps entirely apart from all military conventions, yet the members are strictly disciplined, dressed, and equipped.

Many British firms have formed special Territorial companies or semi-military bodies; but one London manufacturing firm has a complete corps, with band, drums, and fifes, ambulances, etc., and every member of it is an Army officer or ex-soldier, and wears a distinctive uniform.

The Grappling Corps.

This recalls an even more curious corps. It is called the Runcorn and District Grappling Corps, and it possesses a special appliance for recovering the bodies of drowned persons. The captain is ready to turn his corps out by day or night for duty, and claims a certain allowance for successful work.

It is not usual for cavalry regiments to sit two men on one horse. The idea hardly strikes one as military. Yet, some twenty-five years ago, the Servians, when battling with the Bulgarians, were astonished at the arrival of a regiment of the latter with two men on each animal.

But they might have been even more astonished if they had met a band of cavalry to be found on the island of Madagascar. Those soldiers go about their military operations on oxen.

The animals are very lean creatures, but it is said that they move with surprising rapidity—which reminds one of the Camel Corps which we formed during the operations in Egypt some years ago.

Among romantic foreign regiments, none is more famous than the French Foreign Legion, the most cosmopolitan corps in existence, containing many ruined aristocrats, alien criminals, degenerate doctors and professors, and adventurous ruffians of every nation under the sun. The regiments are firmly disciplined, and are employed on every desperate and hazardous expedition. Adventurers are to be found galore by this Legion. But perhaps one would not advise one's best friend to join!

On the far Indian frontiers we employ truculent tribesmen—"Chuklsiara" they are called—to protect the British troops at night against the daring and merciless Pathan rifle-thieves who infest those parts.

Giants Under Arms.

Turning to Germany, we find distinctive regiments there also. Take the 1st Prussian Regiment of Guards, for instance. Every member is a picked giant; but even these are put in the shade by the famous giant Grenadiers of Potsdam.

All countries were scoured for the tallest men; recruits came from Turkey, Sweden, Poland, and even Ireland, and one Tyrolese giant is said to have cost as much as £5,000. The minimum height was six feet; but some of the front rank men measure eight, and even nine, feet.

The present Emperor seems to be bitten by the same craze, for when at Tangier some years ago he was so impressed by the stature of a Moor of colossal proportions that he engaged him on the spot for his 1st Regiment of Foot Guards. German discipline, however, asserted ill with this giant son of Nature, and he half killed the bandmaster by smashing him on the head with the cymbals which he played; and the Kaiser, realizing that physical height can have its drawbacks, after all, had him shipped back to his native country.

The King of Siam has a very imposing bodyguard of 400 high-born ladies, the pick of his kingdom. Essentially a peace organization, one would imagine.

A curious corps of Amazons is retained by the Kroumirs, their duty being to follow their lords to battle, and chant their weird war-song to stimulate the fighters.

Improved Dairy Methods.

"How shall we protect ourselves from bad milk supplies?"

"Pasteurize the cow."

"What do you mean by that?"

"Why, turn her out to pasture, of course!"

WALKERTON

Mr John Waechler, a wealthy retired farmer, wandered away from his home in Walkerton on Thursday morning last, and after being almost two days without either food or shelter, was discovered about 3.30 o'clock Saturday morning lying in a ditch alongside the railway track near Hanover. When found the wanderer was bareheaded and had only one slipper on, and was in the act of picking grass to cover himself. Mr Wm George, pureyman here, who made the discovery, obtained a clue as to his whereabouts in a peculiar manner. A man residing near the scene, had, it seems, got a bad fright earlier in the night by a party shooting at him, and when he took to his heels and beat it the stranger pulled off a slipper and hurled it after him. This rather amusing episode, which the man related, resulted in Mr Waechler's discovery and probably saved his life, for had he remained much longer in the exhausted and exposed condition found, he must surely have expired on the spot.

Sergt Walter Vickers, a veteran of the South African war, returned home on Thursday evening last, gassed and shrapnelled, from his second great fight for the British flag. He was met at the G T R station by the town council and other prominent citizens, in rigs and autos, and after a touching greeting with his wife and child, was escorted amid great enthusiasm to his home. The sergeant, who is still wheezy from the effects of gas and slightly lame from shrapnel shot, has spen and suffered much since he departed from Walkerton at the outbreak of the war to join the Queen's Own Rifles for the front. After coming unscathed through the fight at Armentieres and serving in the trenches at Ypres, he was resting with the Queen's Own at the billet station a short distance back when word came that the French Algerian troops, who had taken over the Canadian trenches, had been driven out by poisonous gas and were fleeing panic-stricken from the fight. This was on the night of April 21st, and the Canadians who rushed up to fill the gap, succeeded the following day in recapturing the heavy guns which the French lost for them when they ran away. The next day, on the 23rd, the Canadians recaptured the second and advanced line of trenches, and it was during this charge that Vickers was wounded by shrapnel shot in the leg, and later grazed by a bullet that made a slight scar, which he still wears, over the right eye. He limped on and got into the advanced trenches and was holding these when, on the 24th, the Germans started pumping the poisonous gas at them. Some of the men in the trench got so badly gassed that blood started running out of their eyes, ears and nose, and with their faces purple and bloated, succumbed in the greatest agony. Vickers' first introduction to the gas came by way of his eyes, which began to smart and fill up with water and later he began to gasp for breath. That was about five o'clock in the afternoon, and the last he remembers was that the Canadians were being driven back and that with the only dozen live men left in the trench he was giving rapid fire to the advancing foe. He then swooned away and remembered nothing more until he woke about 12 o'clock at night and found himself among the corpses in the trench. The Germans had crossed over and supposing him dead, had left him unmolested in the pit. Throwing off his equipment he climbed out of the trench and under cover of the night crawled back to the British lines some 75 yards away. Sergt Vickers was sent the next day to the Red Cross motor ambulance to the dressing station at Ballieul, and from there to the base hospital at Rouen, where he remained for two weeks, after which he was transferred to England and treated for three months in the hospital at Sheffield. He was then sent to recuperate at Shorncliffe and later despatched to Canada. On arriving here he was given his active service medal and an honorale discharge from duty. The Government will also provide him with a pension for life. The sergeant's lungs are still affected by the gas, as is also his right eye, which for a time was nightblind, but which is now gradually recovering its vision. A reception in his honor will be held in the town hall this Thursday night when the town council will present him with a leather upholstered chair and a nicely engrossed address. The sergeant will also relate some of his experiences at the front.—Herald and Times.

DIPLOMACY

"James," said the teacher to the little boy who was being kept after school, "I am surprised that I should have to punish you in this way. You are usually such a very good boy that I could hardly believe my eyes when I saw you throwing spitballs at the little girl across the isle from you. Surely you must have known that was against the rules."

"Yes'm," said James. "I knew it."

"Then why did you do it?"

"Well; teacher, you see, Bill Hicks promised me at recess that he was going to lick me as soon as school was out, and I thought if I could get kept in maybe he'd go away and forgot about it."

Mr. Charles Johnson, 6th con. Bruce, had a narrow escape from drowning on Tuesday of last week, while he was making repairs to his cistern. In looking over the pump he fell head foremost into the water. He managed to keep afloat and attract the attention of passers-by, who helped him out. Mr. Johnson is well up in years, and the experience caused him considerable suffering from shock and cold.

More Peddler Tricks

When will people learn the foolishness of buying from irresponsible peddlers? Last week this town had a visit from a couple more of those "something for nothing" fellows, and they appear to have done a pretty good business. They offered The Woman's Home Companion, "for 48c a year," saying that the publishers were giving this magazine free as an advertising scheme, merely charging for the postage. One lady who had heard of a similar scheme being worked in another town, telephoned her husband who communicated with Chief Ferguson. The Chief rounded up the men, but did not have sufficient evidence to make an arrest, owing to the difficulty in communicating with the head office of the magazine in the United States. Those who parted with 48c at least have a receipt as a souvenir of their investment, though they are not likely to receive any copies of the magazine.—Walkerton Telescope.

The Planter's Daughter;

Or, The Queen of Belle River.

She watched him winding up the little narrow path, and disappearing among the trees, and then she turned into the house, to wash up the breakfast service and set the room in order. The dry advanced—the sparkling freshness of the morning mellowed into noon. And then she got up and took a pitcher and went down to the spring, that seemed to have been calling her in its merry voice all the morning. A narrow steep path down into the dingle led to the spring, and beyond it arose a high hill, heavily wooded, like all the land about there. She filled her pitcher, and returned to the house to take her lonely noontide luncheon. And then, as the meridian sun was pouring its rays in at the door, which you know faced the south, she removed her needlework to the west window, and resumed her sewing. She sat at the cool east window, until the striking of the clock warned her that it was time to prepare the afternoon meal, which was to comprise "dinner and supper together." But what was there to be got for dinner, after all? Tea without milk, bread without butter, and salted beef without vegetables. A poor meal certainly to set before an epicurean.

Suddenly she recollected having seen some wild plum trees growing on the hill beyond the spring, and she thought she would go and get some to make a pie. She seized her bonnet, caught up a little basket and set out. She hastened down the dingle path, crossed the spring, and climbed the hill. She reached its summit, and stopped to breathe, and rest for a moment. The wild plum trees furnished a rich harvest. She had only to shake the slight and graceful shaft and a shower of ripe fruit fell around her. She quickly filled her basket; and then, with her girlish love of change, she returned to the house by another way.

Delighted with these woodland treasures—such a delicious addition to her frugal board—she returned to the cabin, and began to prepare their evening meal. The arrangement of the table was complete—the last things set upon it being the delicate pastry and the cut-glass bowl of raspberries, powdered with sugar. But, there was no cream or butter; and this was Rosalie's sole regret, as she gave a pleased glance at the whole effect, and then went to each window, and put aside the muslin curtains to let in the evening breeze. As she turned from the window, she was startled by a thump upon the floor, and the exclamation of:

"There! she sent you these! And I wonder why wou couldn't o' coomed arter them your self?"

And with astonishment Rosalie saw standing in the room a large, fair-complexioned, middle-aged man. He had just thumped on the floor a large basket, filled with vegetables. He still held in his hand a tin-pail, with a tin pan covered upon the top of it.

"Who are you?" inquired she.

"Billy. Here's the butter. Where am I to pour the milk?" said the man lifting the little pan that contained a pound print, and displaying half a gallon of milk in the pail.

"Who sent these?" asked Rose, in surprise.

"She! Can't you empty the milk? I've got to carry the bucket back.

"I am afraid there is some mistake," said Rose, hesitating. "Who did you say sent you?"

"Her, I tell you. I can't stand here gabbin'."

"But, my good friend, there is some error," persisted Rosalie.

With no more ado, "Billy" marched up to the corner-cupboard, seized a knife, passed it under the print of butter, and deftly turned the print out of the pan into a plate; next, he took up the pail and poured the milk into a pitcher; finally, he went back and seized his basket, and, setting nothing to receive the vegetables, just turned it upside down and shook them out on the floor—and potatoes, cucumbers, onions, tomatoes, etc., rolled in every direction.

"Now, for the futur', mind, you must come arter 'em every day, yourself—if they're worth havin' they're worth comin' for, an' I've got 'nough to do for her, 'out trudgin' over here every day for you."

Full of wonder, she set about to collect the fugitive potatoes, tomatoes, etc. She put them under the lower shelf of her cupboard, and drew the short white curtain before them; then she set the pitcher of rich milk and the plate of fresh butter upon the tables much pleased with the unexpected luxury, but more pleased to anticipate the surprise and pleasure of Mark. She heard his footstep before she saw his form; and she closed the door and ran up the woodland path to meet him. Rosalie had said nothing of her new luxuries; and when they entered the cabin, and he threw a glance around, and dropped his eyes upon the table, first of all he caught and kissed Rose again for her affectionate care, and then, by his exclamations and questions, exhibited all the surprise and satisfaction that the most exacting little Rose could have desired.

After supper was over and the moon had risen, they crossed the rill and went up the hill to enjoy the fine air and the extended view.

CHAPTER XXIV.

The next morning, after breakfast, Rosalie received a call from her kind neighbor, Mrs. Attridge, the wife of the worthy proprietor of the neighboring lead-smelting furnace. She pressed upon her young neighbor the freedom of her garden and her dairy. Talking of vegetables, led to the subject of "Billy." Billy was a native of Holland, brought over to America in his infancy and left a destitute orphan, whom her mother had taken and brought up, but whose peculiarity of disposition and simplicity of character was such as stifled him only for housework. On the death of his first mistress, Billy had attached himself to the fortunes of herself and husband, and had accompanied them to the West, and had been their only house servant ever since—cooking, cleaning, washing, ironing, as well as any woman could.

"What do you intend to do about your washing, my dear?—for it is all nonsense to suppose that you could wash."

"It is, indeed," said Rosalie; "and that is just what disturbs me so. I attempted to do so, and made myself almost ill. I feel thoroughly ashamed of my helplessness in some respects."

Mrs. Attridge made no comment, but looked upon her young neighbor with a considerate, fond expression on her honest countenance.

"Can you advise me what to do, Mrs. Attridge? for I have resolved that my husband shall be put to no expense for these matters."

"Oh, pshaw! you can never do it," said the visitor, reflectively.

"Yes, it is real incapacity on my part. I am not constitutionally weak, but the muscles of my arms and chest have never been trained to great or continued exertion—more is the pity! Look at my wrists."

And Rosalie held out two delicate, fair, tapering arms. And Mrs. Attridge took and held them affectionately, while she said:

"I know; it would be cruel to expect hard work of you. I have been thinking, since I sat here of an Irish family of the name of Malony, who live in a shanty about a quarter of a mile from this, on my road home. Now, although they are thriving, she and her family are always ragged. She says she has time to sew. Now," said Mrs. Attridge, "suppose you were to barter work with Judy, and pay her for her washing by making up clothing. I will call and see Judy on my way home."

Rosalie cordially thanked her kind friend.

"I shall send Billy over with more fresh milk this evening. And you must not mind his grumbling. He grumbles at me and Mr. Attridge all day."

Mrs. Attridge, after promising Rosalie to walk over and see her often, took leave.

That evening Mark returned home sooner than usual. His countenance was cheerful with good news, and he threw into Rosalie's lap a packet of letters from home—the first that had been received since their separation.

There was a letter from Colonel Ashley, full of kind wishes, and something more substantial in the shape of a check on a St. Louis bank. He informed them that he was again alone; St. Gerald, having lost his election, had yielded to the wishes of his wife, and taken her to her Southern home; and that he expected his own eldest daughter, now a widow, to return and take the direction of his household.

There was also a letter from Valerie to Rose, and one from Lincoln to Mark.

The next day Rosalie was somewhat surprised to receive a visit from Judy, and well satisfied to effect an arrangement by which Judy was to do all the washing and ironing for Rosalie, who was to repay her by making up frocks and aprons for her children.

On the first Sabbath Mrs. Attridge called in her carry-all to offer the young couple the two vacant seats to church, a favor which they frankly and gratefully accepted. And afterward, Mark Sutherland was much pleased when it fell in the way of his profession to do Mr. Attridge a gratuitous service—a favor which it was rather difficult to make honest Paul Attridge accept, who answered to all Mr. Sutherland's grateful acknowledgements and expostulations:

"That neighbors should be neighbor, but that professional men should be paid for their services."

As passed the week, so passed the autumn, bringing little change in the circumstances of our young friends. Mr. Sutherland gained admittance to the bar; but as his professional duties were confined exclusively to office business, the drawing up of deed-bonds, mortgages, etc. And this was not profitable. Indeed, many of his best-meaning neighbors strongly advised him to take up government land and turn his attention to agriculture. But this Rosalie opposed with all her might, encouraging him to be constant to his profession.

Early in December a heavy fall of snow covered the ground for two or three feet in depth. The snow lay on the ground for several weeks, during which time the hardships and privations of the young couple were so great as to determine them to seize the earliest opportunity of removing into town; and Mark accordingly sought a house in Shelton. And, having found one, he rented it at once.

A return to the society of her fellow-beings produced a very happy change in the spirit of Rosalie.

Considerable and thriving as was the town of Shelton, no newspaper had as yet been established there. Rosalie spoke of this to her husband.

In brief, Rosalie effected her purpose. Mark Sutherland prevailed on the principal men of the village to unite in establishing a free paper; they appointed Mr. Sutherland the editor. There was no good school in Shelton. The want of one was greatly felt. Rosalie proposed to Mark that she should open one. Mark at first opposed the plan. But Rosalie found her greatest health of mind and body in her greatest activity and usefulness. The girl's school was established by her single enterprise. And it grew and prospered.

CHAPTER XXV.

Four years had passed away since Mark and Rosalie had taken up their residence in the village of Shelton. A handsome court-house, an excellent market-place, a lyceum—an incipient library and museum, lent its attractions to the town; an elegant and capacious hotel replaced the rude, clap-boarded tavern of Colonel Garner. The country around the village had become thickly settled.

Our friends, Mark and Rosalie, had grown up with the village. Their paper, the True Freeman, and their school, had both greatly prospered.

Mark's professional business had increased very rapidly. He could not have specified any day, or any suit, from which his success had taken its impetus. He felt that there was an outward influence, an external power, to which he owed much of his persistent energy—a power living by his side, that continually threw itself with all its ardor and force into his purposes—into his soul. And he felt and knew that from the quiet, fair, and fragile being at his side, he drew continual strength; that, in addition to his own, he absorbed her life.

"Not only for you, but for humanity, dearest Mark, I wish you to attain power and place. You will attain them, and—I shall not die till then!" she would mentally add.

At the end of the fourth year of their residence in Shelton, Rosalie having attained her majority, it became necessary for Mark Sutherland to go to Cashmere for the purpose of making a final settlement with her guardian, Clement Sutherland, and taking possession of her splendid fortune.

It was on a cool, pleasant day of September that Judge Sutherland set out on his journey for the South.

The boat was on her way, and his thoughts turned from her he was leaving behind to those he was hastening to meet. Although he had written to his mother regularly, he had received no letter from her for several months, and the vague reports from Silentshades were not satisfactory.

It was on the afternoon of the sixth day of his voyage that the boat stopped at the wharf of the small hamlet of C——, and Mark Sutherland debarked, and hired a horse to take him to Cashmere.

Mark rode down to the edge of the river, to the ferry-house, now fallen into neglect and dilapidation.

The white-haired negro ferryman was a servant of Clement Sutherland's. He met his "young master" with a look of surprise and pleasure, and to his question as to whether they were all well at Cashmere, answered with a sigh that they were just as usual.

Mark asked him other questions, and in perfect silence the old man put his passenger over to the Cashmere side.

The Farm

A Few Pointers for Dairymen.

A poor milker never gets the best results from a cow. A nervous animal resents the bungling touch of a rough or inexperienced hand.

Why not encourage the little peculiarities of the well-bred dairy cow. She is simply a big milking machine and if her whims will produce more milk let her have them.

If we are going to select a bull we would select the one with the worst temper, all other things being equal. Because temper and vigor show male characteristics which should not be ignored.

A gentle sleepy bull that can be managed without a nose ring does not as a rule produce the best calves.

It is downright cruelty to keep a bull in a small enclosure in the summer, a victim to heat and flies—but many men who claim to be good dairymen, do this very thing.

How could we expect a cow to keep in good health and give pure milk when she is confined in foul and ill-ventilated quarters, winter or summer.

A pair of horse-clippers can be bought for $1.50 and the use of these once a month on the cow's flanks and udder will make it an easy matter to keep them clean.

How many cows on the average farm give milk containing more than twenty per cent. of butter-fat? Perhaps not more than one out of every 100.

The separator should never be allowed in the barn or near it.

A half dozen window sash, glazed, will make a dust-proof box in which the dairy vessels can be sunned and kept absolutely clean.

Any enterprising farmer living near a town of 5,000 or more can sell every pound of his butter at full retail prices or little above, the year round.

For several years we have bought farm butter from the same farmer, at two cents above retail market price, every month in the year and glad to get it.

Never attempt to keep summer butter for early fall prices, because it will not keep.

All milk should be aerated as soon as taken from the cow. This can be done by passing it through the aerator, but it is not as good as a device which divides the milk into many fine streams and then allows it to flow over a wide surface in thin sheets with plenty of ice to keep the surface cool.

If nothing better can be had, milk may be aerated by placing the cans in a trough of cold water and dipping the milk with a long-handled dipper and pouring it back into the can until it is thoroughly cool.

Never cover milk while warm, in the cans, as it will produce a musty odor.

The milker who will thump a cow for squirming under the attack of flies, ought to be hoisted out of the barn on the toe of the dairyman's boots.

Need not expect cows to keep up the milk flow during the tail-end of summer, unless you have plenty of soiling crops to feed. Dead grass does not produce milk.

The Value of Cow Peas.

They can be grown as far north as Dent corn can be grown and on land so poor that clover would not catch at all. They are called "the poor man's clover," because you can get such quick results. A crop of cow peas can be grown in three months, and it will be fully equal to a two years' crop of clover. You can sow the peas any time from May to August and can get a good big crop following an early crop taken off in June. Plowed under after the first frost, they will leave the ground in elegant shape for a crop next year. The seed costs about $2.50 per bushel and should be drilled in at the rate of one half bushel per acre.

Ration for Chicks.

A simple grain mixture is corn, wheat, and oats, a little more corn as the weather gets colder and less during the summer days. A little buckwheat and sunflower seed added to this mixture during fall and winter months is beneficial. Green foods, such as alfalfa, cabbage, sprouted oats or mangles should be fed freely. Fresh green cut bone or feed scraps and charcoal should also be supplied at all seasons of the year.

Inventors' Fortunes.

It is not always the greatest invention that brings the largest financial reward. Roller skates are said to have brought their inventor $3,000,000, while nearly half a million was realized by the man who first devised boot laces. The inventor of the safety pin, who took the idea from a reproduction of a Pompeiian cameo, made $10,000,000. On the other hand, Charles Bourseul, who discovered and described the principle of the telephone in 1855, died poor; Michaux, the inventor of the bicycle, ended his days in the utmost penury, and Frederic Sauvage, who is credited with the invention of the screw propellor, was imprisoned and died bankrupt and insane.

GERMANY'S IGNOBLE BACK-DOWN.

By Chas. M. Bice, Denver, Col.

After much "crimination and recrimination" between the governments of the U. S. and that of Germany, the Kaiser has at last yielded to the American demand respecting submarine depredations.

Some people call this a diplomatic victory for the Yankee nation; but others are equally insistent that Germany has yielded only because "the waters were made too hot" for her by the activity of the British naval force. Whatever may be the real cause of Germany's acceding to America's demand, the result is equally glorious and reassuring. Regret, disavowal and indemnity are all conceded by Germany, with the assurance that the Teuton will hereafter be good. We are assured that the Kaiser's order to his submarines has been made so drastically stringent that the recurrence of incidents similar to the Arabic and Lusitania cases is considered out of the question.

At the outset of the negotiations Germany asserted her right in unmistakable terms to continue her original submarine policy, and stated in its first note that "the German Government is unable to acknowledge any obligation to grant indemnity in the matter, even if the commander of the submarine should have been mistaken as to the aggressive intentions of the Arabic." But, in the note a month or so later, we were informed by Count Bernstorff, that Germany is willing to negotiate concerning the amount of the indemnity to be paid for the disaster, and this is expressly stated, whether the submarine commander was convinced or not, that the Arabic intended to ram the submarine; and Germany has gracefully yielded to the testimony of the British officers to the contrary. The Imperial government, in the same note, assured America that "the attack of the submarine was undertaken against the instructions issued to the commander," and that "the Government disavows the act and has notified the commander, Schneider, accordingly."

We have some recollection of a "war zone" decree, and the liberal dimensions thereof, as set by the German naval officials, but all this is now a mere reminiscence, it seems, and we are to hear no more about it.

This is a signal and surprising victory for the whole world, for it fixes the limits of submarine activity for all time, and demonstrates how illy founded were Mr. Bryan's direful apprehensions that found expression in his resignation as a cabinet officer. What a chance for immortal glory his evil genius induced him to throw away!

This is not merely an American victory. In principle the U. S. has been defending the rights of all neutrals, and all will rejoice over the success of American diplomacy.

The result will make it easier to broaden and strengthen the code of international rights when the present war is ended. Force has bowed to rectitude, and morality has dominated power once more. President Wilson's statesmanship, inflexible will and lofty courage have again triumphed, and though harassed at home by the impatient, and heckled by Teutonic sympathizers, he deserves and will receive the adoration of a grateful people.

Certain papers in this country that stand for, America's preparedness, however, are disposed to belittle the achievement, and claim, if there is a triumph, it is naval rather than diplomatic, for, say they, "Germany has abandoned her submarine warfare against merchant shipping and the rights of neutrals because the British fleet has made the submarine question a dead issue."

What about the Lusitania? demand these papers. That question is still unsettled.

But Germany's answer in the case of the Arabic, and the concessions therein made, and principles enunciated, should easily apply to the Lusitania when the time comes to settle that dispute. It is enough to know that the weapon she relied upon has been struck from her hand, and that ends it.

The President got nearly everything he demended, bit by bit, and the American public kept its head and backed the President. The war-tooters and peace-at-any-price fawners, and the angry hyphenated citizens have had their day in court. The public has had enough of them. Whether the President "muddled through" in the diplomatic controversy, as some claim, or not, we have escaped the danger of being dragged into an ignominious war.

Never judge a woman by the company she is compelled to entertain.

HOW TO CURE RHEUMATISM

The Disease is in the Blood and Must Be Treated Through the Blood.

There are almost as many ways of treating rheumatism as there are doctors. Most of these treatments are directed at the symptoms and are considered successful if they relieve the pain and the stiffness. But the pain and the stiffness return particularly if the patient has been exposed to dampness. This shows that the poison was not driven from the system by the treatment employed. Rheumatism can be relieved in a number of ways, but there is only one way to cure it, and that is through the blood, expelling the poisonous acid that causes the aches and pains and stiffness. To renew and enrich the blood there is no medicine can equal Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which go right in the root of the trouble and cure rheumatism to stay cured. The following is an example of what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills can do in cases of this kind. Mr. Henry Smith, St. Jerome, Que., says:—"For upwards of a year I was a victim of rheumatism in a most painful form. The trouble was located in my legs, and for a long time was so bad that I could not walk. The suffering which I endured can only be imagined by those who have been similarly afflicted. Doctors' treatment did not help me, and then I began trying other remedies, but with no better results. Finally I was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and although I had begun to lose faith in medicine, I finally decided to give the pills a trial. I am very grateful now that I did so, for after taking eight boxes the pills the trouble completely disappeared, I was free from pain and could walk as well as ever I did in my life. I have since taken the pills occasionally as a precautionary measure, and I cannot speak too highly in their favor.

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

FINDS FOUR KINDS OF BOMBS.

Magazine Describes the Hair Brush and Others.

There are no other articles on the subject of the war that can compare with those to be found month by month in Blackwood's Magazine. Even the censor has been unable to take the life and spirit out of them, and perhaps because they see the light so long after the events they describe have occurred they contain valuable and interesting information not to be found elsewhere.

A writer in the current number gives an interesting account of the various bombs that are being used in the trenches. He says:

"The hair brush is very like the ordinary hair brush except that the bristles are replaced by a solid block of high explosive. The policeman's truncheon has gay streamers of tape tied to its tail to insure that it falls to the ground nose downward. Both these bombs explode on impact, and it is inadvisable to knock them against anything, say the back of the trench, when throwing them.

"The cricket ball works by a time fuse. The removal of a certain pin releases a spring which lights an internal fuse timed to explode the bomb in five seconds. You take the bomb in your right hand, remove the pin and cast the thing madly from from you. The jam tin variety appeals more particularly to the sportsman, as the element of chance enters largely into its successful use. It is timed to explode about ten seconds after the lighting of the fuse."

WISE WORDS

A Physician on Food.

A Western physician has views about food. He says:

"I have always believed that the duty of the physician does not cease with treating the sick, but that we owe it to humanity to teach them how to protect their health especially by hygienic and dietetic laws.

"With such a feeling as to my duty I take great pleasure in saying, that, in my own experience and also from personal observation, I have found no food to equal Grape-Nuts and that I find there is almost no limit to the great benefit this food will bring when used in all cases of sickness and convalescence.

"It is my experience that no physical condition forbids the use of Grape-Nuts. To persons in health there is nothing so nourishing and acceptable to the stomach especially at breakfast to start the machinery of the human system on the day's work.

"In cases of indigestion I know that a complete breakfast can be made of Grape-Nuts and cream; and I think it is necessary not to overload the stomach at the morning meal. I also know the great value of Grape-Nuts when the stomach is too weak to digest other food.

"This is written after an experience of more than 20 years treating all manner of chronic and acute diseases, and the letter is voluntary on my part without any request for it."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

WHAT DRIVES MAN TO DRINK.

The Literary Digest, September 18, 1915, has an article, the first sentence of which reads, "The impulse to drunkenness is disease." After pointing out that men drink for various reasons, it says that those who "drink to get drunk are abnormal; they are diseased." This fact has been brought out distinctly in the psychopathic laboratory of the Chicago Municipal Court. Judge Olsen of the Court says, "We have yet to find the first case of the kind where there is not a tendency to epilepsy, dementia praecox, manic depressive insanity, or feeble-mindedness." All this means that the man who frequently gets drunk is of unsound mind and should be so treated. In Kansas they send chronic drunkards to an asylum for the insane. In Ohio they have an institution to which the habitual drunkard may be sent by the judge on application by the friends until he is considered cured. I knew a clever young man who went to an asylum and begged the Superintendent to take him in for a year till he would have a chance to break off. There are many such pitiful cases for which there is no provision made, in spite of the revenue from the traffic that causes it.

It is a serious reflection on our civilization that there is no provision made for this class, most of them the victims of the license system. We see such men going down for years, wasting their substance in drink, beggaring their families and becoming a nuisance and often a menace to society, and little or nothing is done to help them. They sometimes try desperately to break off, but what hope in the presence of the open barroom and the treating custom? The physician is not allowed to send them to any institution unless he is very rich. There is neither hope nor help for him till he becomes insane or commits a crime. But what caused this disease condition? "The curse causeless shall not come." Statistics generally point to a drinking father or grandfather. He was probably ignorant of the fact that his drinking would injure his children and grandchildren.

Then, for God's sake help us to spread this truth far and wide that the sins of drinking parents are visited on the children and grandchildren.

How to Save Your Eyes

Try This Free Prescription

Do your eyes give you trouble? Do you already wear eyeglasses or spectacles? Thousands of people wear these "windows" who might easily dispense with them. You may be one of these, and it is your duty to save your eyes before it is too late. The eyes are neglected more than any other organ of the entire body. After you finish your day's work rub 'em down and rest your muscles, but how about your eyes? Do you rest them? You know you do not. Take good care of the machine that keeps your eyes busy; you work your eyes until you go to bed. That is why so many have strained eyes and finally other eye troubles that threaten partial or total blindness. Eyeglasses are merely crutches; they never cure. This free prescription, which has benefited the eyes of so many, may work equal wonders for you. Use it a short time. Would you like your eye troubles to disappear as if by magic? Try this prescription. Go to the nearest wide-awake drug store and get a bottle of Bon-Opto tablets; fill a two-ounce bottle with warm water, drop in one tablet and allow it to thoroughly dissolve. With this liquid bathe the eyes two to four times daily. Just note how quickly your eyes clear up and how soon the inflammation will disappear. Don't be afraid to use it; it is absolutely harmless. Many who are now blind might have saved their eyes had they started to care for them in time. This is a simple treatment, but marvellously effective in multitudes of cases. Now that you have been warned don't delay a day, but do what you can to save your eyes, and you are likely to thank us as long as you live for only lifting this prescription. The Valiant Drug Co. of Toronto will fill the above prescription by mail, if your druggist cannot.

RED CROSS MIRACLES.

If you are inclined to believe that the age of miracles is past and wish visible evidence of Red Cross thaumaturgy, you have only to look at our returned soldiers who are now coming home in steadily increasing numbers. Nearly every returned soldier is a Red Cross miracle, for in the majority of cases a soldier is invalided home only when he is physically incapacitated for further service. You may think that some of them are sadly crippled and mutilated, but if you could compare their condition to-day with their condition when they were first placed in the hands of surgeon and nurse, you would be able to estimate what the Red Cross has done in the way of patching up and healing shattered bodies.

In Canada, however, you can not see the greatest miracles of the Red Cross and Army Service Corps—the men who have been made sound and whole and as good as new again, and are once more back in the trenches, making one life do double service. Indeed, is not a miracle that one man having only one life to give should be able to give that life twice and even three times over—thanks to the Red Cross.

Think what the Red Cross has saved in that most precious of all commodities — human life — and be certain when next you put your name on a Red Cross subscription list that you have made a very profitable investment—to say nothing of performing a humane and patriotic act.

Pig-iron is produced in greater quantity by the United States than by any other country; Germany and Luxemburg rank second for supply, and the United Kingdom third.

WOULD NOT BE WITHOUT BABY'S OWN TABLETS

Thousands of mothers throughout Canada have written of their thankfulness for what Baby's Own Tablets have done for their little ones. Among them is Mrs. Frank Weight, Clifford, Ont., who says—"I would not be without Baby's Own Tablets, as they were of great help to me when my little boy was troubled with constipation and sour stomach." The Tablets cure indigestion; colds and simple fevers; colic; expel worms and promote healthy sleep. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

DRAPED ONE-PIECE DRESSES IMMENSELY POPULAR.

From the large number of one-piece dresses which are being worn at parties and other social occasions, as well as in the home, it is apparent that milady's wardrobe will not be complete this winter without one or more of these garments. The winning feature of the one-piece model are that every taste from the extreme to the austere may be satisfied and the case with which these dresses may be made.

For example, observe the smart, pleasing effect of the Ladies' Home Journal Pattern No. 9191, illustrated herewith. The dress consists of a foundation waist with kimono sleeves and a removable chemisette. Here also is shown the natty effect obtained by the sleeveless overblouse in handkerchief effect and a bib-girdle, forming postillions at the back. The skirt is a five-gore gathered model, and may be made with or without the cascade overskirt. Cuts in sizes 14, 16, 18 and 20 years. Size 18 requires 6⅝ yards of 36-inch material with 2⅝ yards 30-inch contrasting material, and ⅝ yards 27-inch silk.

Patterns, 15 cents each, may be secured at your own Ladies' Home Journal Pattern dealer, or from The Home Pattern Company, 183 George Street, Toronto, Ontario.

The Kaiser and Providence.

The Kaiser's idea of Providence is just like old Washington White's. The nigger had a fine roast capon for dinner one Sunday. As he carved it he said with a grateful, humble air, "Let us thank Providence for this here meal, dear friends. This here capon belonged to Judge Shurp, my next-door neighbor, and night after night I prayed that the bird might come flyin' over into my yard. But it never came, never, never came. Then I prayed, dear friends, that I might go over into its yard and fetch it, and the very first time of askin' dear friends, Providence granted my request."

A fortune awaits the genius who can invent a mirror that will convince a woman she is as pretty as she thinks she is.

By Hook Or By Crook.

Often one hears people say that they will do a certain thing "by hook or by crook." This expression dates back to feudal days, and refers to the old forest laws, which gave permission to poor people to gather wood on condition that they neither cut nor sawed timber. Those branches which they could break, or such sticks as could be carried away were theirs, but this was all they were entitled to. To pull down dead branches, or remove sticks from the undersbrush, certain hooks and crooked poles were brought into use. Those in time came to be called hooks and crooks. By their use the peasants managed to procure all the wood needed. Hence the expression "by hook or by crook."

WANTED LETTER; GOT 3,000.

Appeal of "Lonely Soldier" Brings a Surfeit.

The story of the "lonely soldier" at the front, published in a London newspaper, describing how he shrank away "shamefaced and empty handed when the postal lorries rumbled in and eager hands shot up for letters and parcels from dear ones at home," has had an amusing sequel. Within three days there arrived ninety huge parcels for the lonely one, six bags of smaller parcels, and 3,000 letters!

Again, a Manchester paper printed a letter from a corporal in the Second South Lancashires, saying he was probably unique as a man who had not received a single communication from the home land since the war began. That corporal's next letter to the paper was very brief: "I've received 320 letters and papers, and I'm steadily working through the replies."

Indian Prince in France.

Early in the war when the expeditionary forces were being mobilized and equipped, Sir Pertrabl Singh, a seventy-year-old veteran Indian Prince, who had seen active service in the past, organized and equipped at his own expense almost an army corps of his subjects and offered both himself and his men to his Majesty King George. The moral effect of this action and the acceptance of the volunteers by the King of England has tended to cement the feeling of loyalty existing between the Indian colonies and England. Sir Pertrabl Singh has distinguished himself with his command with the British forces in France.

The Paisley Advocate

PAISLEY, DEC. 1st, 1915

—The three-cent rate of postage on letters is likely to stay with us for at least ten years. With such a prospect the Post Office Department should be warranted in issuing a three-cent stamp without further delay. If this is not done before the next session of Parliament at Ottawa, our members should bring the matter up in the House.

—The old reproach that in war time disease took a greater toll in death than the gun and the bayonet is a thing of the past, thanks to medical knowledge and activity. Great Britain has a vaster army in the field than ever before, yet the percentage of disease is lower than in times of peace, reports Sir James Crichton-Browne. The men in charge of the soldiers' health are doing their work well.

—Within the past few weeks three farmers of Bruce Tp have taken up their abode in Port Elgin, after deciding to retire from active work. These are three families who will make the most desirable citizens that any town can draw from the rural sections surrounding. All three would for various reasons have preferred to make their homes in Paisley, but could not obtain suitable homes here at any price. What is our loss under these circumstances is a decided gain to our sister town. Paisley really needs a few new modern dwelling houses to meet the demand for accommodation at all times. Some who are living in small or inconvenient quarters are desirous of securing improved homes, but are not prepared to build for themselves.

—Commandeer is a word the application of which is entirely new to Canadians, in fact not until this week was its real meaning ever realized fully in this country. When the announcement came through the daily papers on Monday that the Canadian Government had commandeered 15,000,000 bushels of wheat in elevators at Port Arthur and points east, we were provided with another sensation of the war. Part of the great Canadian wheat crop is wanted by Britain to help supply her allies with food during the next few months of the campaign, and requested the Canadian Government to provide within a short time a very large supply of wheat. As the placing of immense government orders in the market on short notice would cause an abnormal inflation of prices for stored grain, the Government decided to commandeer all that is in the elevators at present. This means that the holder must sell and deliver to the Government's orders, and to no other buyers. While the action caused quite a disturbance among the big millers and the shipping companies engaged in transporting the wheat from elevator points affected, the influence on the market is not likely to be very great. The price to be paid is that prevailing on Saturday last. The action spoils the big speculators' game, and gives the western farmer a chance to benefit by the war orders. The amount of grain now to be taken over is probably only a small part of what will be required from Canada, and from the 350,000,000 bushels harvested a great deal can be reserved for Britian and the Allies by taking authoritive steps to do so. Whether the Government intend handling any more by the same process is not yet known.

—To bring about a more even distribution of the wealth of the world is one of the great problems of this democratic age. There is no doubt this war was originally conceived with the idea of checking the development of democracy among the nations of Europe. Unless the Allies fail to carry out their grim determination to overthrow autocracy and militarism, by the time peace is restored the vast gulf between the over-rich and the very poor will be more nearly bridged than it has ever been, and a larger proportion of men moving through life on the same level in point of worldly wealth. During the war some of the most powerful governments have undertaken to control what has heretofore been considered exclusive fields for private enterprise. The commandeering of part of the Canadian wheat crop is one of many moves made by the government to promote the success of the war. THE ADVOCATE is so radically inclined as to believe that the whole grain crop of any producing country such as Canada could be handled to very much better advantage to the wheat growers if we had a system by which a Government Commission took it all over for marketing. The speculative grain market has made a lot of millionaires in this young Dominion, and all at the expense of the farmers who plow the fields, sow, cultivate, reap and thresh the crop.

The $1.50 Weekly

THE publisher of a weekly newspaper finds that he is compelled to increase the price of the paper from $1.00 to $1.50 per annum. The reason of this is the increase in the price of so many materials entering into the cost of the production. White paper has advanced in price. Metal has been advanced in price. Type that once could be purchased for 48 cents a pound to-day costs 94 cents. The war has had its effect on all trades, but few have felt it as heavily as the newspaper. Receiving $1.00 for a paper never was a paying proposition, but the increase all along the line makes the cost considerably more than that sum. One Bruce county publisher has carefully figured out the actual cost in his office and finds it to be $1.74 for each paper he issues. The selling profits from advertising leave a deficit to the producer and he is compelled to raise the price of the weekly newspaper. In Bruce county the raise will be to $1.50. However, all who pay their subscriptions in advance and before the 31st of January, 1916, will receive their paper at the old rate of $1.00 for the year 1916. After that it will be $1.50. Necessity compels the publisher to take this step which he should have taken long ago.

The instability of the grain markets of the world due to the gambling in the exchanges is a curse to the world of commerce, which would be completely eliminated were governments looking after the marketing interests of the people for the people. Nor would we stop at wheat alone. All natural resources and means of transportation should be in the hands of the people, instead of being operated for purposes of gain and profit to private pockets. Individuals grow greedy and are not satisfied with a reasonable margin of profits. We need more government ownership to make our democracy the real thing. The Ontario Hydro Commission is possibly destined to demonstrate to us the benefits of that plan of conducting large business, and may be the forerunner of numerous other schemes for the benefit of the public.

—Bruce Tp. farmers are evidently becoming alive to the noxious weeds menace, as some of them petitioned the council to appoint an inspector, which was done at the last meeting. Mr. Geo. Hood is the man appointed, and if he goes about the duties systematically and energetically he will undoubtedly be able to perform a valuable service to the township and landowners. He will also be one of the busiest officials of the municipality, as the problem of eradicating noxious weeds is one that requires persistent attention on the part of both the inspector and every farmer. Some there are who always endeavor to clean up all the weeds on their property, but more neglect doing so, with the result that districts become infested to such an extent that action is necessary on the part of the authorities. Were every farmer to take an interest and pride in cleaning up his own fields, there would be no need for appointing a special officer to enforce a noxious weeds law. Other townships adjacent might well follow the example of Bruce and go after the weed growers. Possibly it is not generally known that in some parts of Ontario, not far from this, there are scores of farms almost useless because of the foothold that weeds have obtained in the soil. The wastage from such a condition is enormous, and should not be tolerated. The Ontario Agricultural and Experimental Union has demonstrated by co-operative experiments the possibility of controlling and eradicating almost every troublesome weed by proper methods of cultivation and cropping. The same success can be attained by any farmers who follow the same methods. All interested may obtain ample information on the subject upon application to the Ontario Department of Agriculture for the bulletins and publications.

A Good War Story

Pte. Fred Durant relates a good story about an Indian in the trenches. Seeing a Bunah soldier wearing an exceptionally good pair of boots the Indian inquired of him where he managed to come into possession of such good footwear. "Took them off a German," replied the Britisher. "They look pretty good, mind have a pair," said the Indian. Next day the Indian disappeared. Night came, morning came, but no Indian showed up. A couple of days passed and the Indian warrior was given up for lost. The third day, the day of all miracles, the Indian turned up with a pair of good quality boots on. When questioned as to where he got the boots and the time it took to get them, he said, "I had to kill about sixty of them Germans to get a pair to fit."—Stratford Express.

LOCAL AND DISTRICT NEWS

At Malta

In a letter to her home here Nurse Mary Fletcher tells of the wanderings of the University of Toronto hospital staff in the eastern war zone. They have visited three different places in the Mediterranean and are still on an hospital ship. The ship they sailed on from England, the Kildonan Castle, stopped at the Island of Lemnos and was ordered to take men from the Gallipoli Peninsula, and while on this service witnessed the sea fighting, and could also see the land operations better than if they had been ashore.

No Huron and Bruce Battalion

The proposition that Huron and Bruce Counties unite in organizing and recruiting one battalion for overseas service does not meet with the approval of the military authorities, who have advised that each county must act separately. Huron officers have already decided to make the effort to raise a battalion there, and Major Hay is calling a meeting of Bruce Co. officers at Walkerton on Wednesday, Dec 8th, to consider ways and means of carrying out a similar recruiting scheme in this county. While it may not be possible to enroll the thousand men to complete a battalion, it is considered probable that at least half that number can be secured within our borders, and even that would be a worthy offering for the Empire's service at the present critical juncture. There are no large centres of population in Bruce to draw from, and nearly every town or village has already contributed a creditable quota to the fighting line. The farms, as a rule, are not overmanned, yet there is quite a scrambling of young and fit men who may be spared if they be aroused to a sense of their duty to render their service as soldiers instead of producers for the good of the cause of freedom. Major Hay has received from Premier Hearst a cheque for $500 from the Ontario Government, which is to be expended for recruiting purposes only. The Government some time ago decided to lend their assistance to the recruiting campaign, and after investigation concluded that the above sum should be forwarded to the Bruce regimental officers to be used in stimulating a ready to the colors. The County Council will be asked to contribute to the recruiting fund also.

News From the Front

Mr S. Babcock received the following cheery letter from his brother, Sergt. Andy Babcock, dated Belgium, Nov 21th. "We are back again in battalion reserve, and have been out of the first line of trenches three days now. This part of the reserve line isn't the best, but dugouts, about a mile from the first, or firing line. When we went into the trenches about nine days ago it was raining to beat the band, and going up the communication trench the boys were up to their waists in mud and water. That wasn't the worst part of our experience, either, for after we did get into the trenches some places the boys had to stand up to their knees in water all night when on sentry go. Our consolation was that Fritz and Hans had to take the same medicine. Next day we had to start draining, and repairing the parapet which had fallen down in several places. In repairing these gaps the men had to expose themselves to the enemy's fire, but owing to their being in the same boat, as it were, with damaged parapets, etc., we made a kind of a short truce by not firing on any of the Germans who had to expose themselves. We didn't even have a word of mouth agreement, but Fritz soon caught on. Some of them were even standing up on the parapet shouting across to our boys. This truce only covered our frontage, and everything went fine until some fool in the battalion on our left shot one of the Huns standing up in full view. Of course, everything was called off then, and our lads had to get to cover in double time. Our fellows were rather lucky, only two of them were slightly wounded. That ended our little game of truce. After that we had to do our repairing in the darkness. That is always the way. Some fool always spoils a good thing. Sam Tooke had a little accident while in the trenches. He was carrying something along the trench after dark, and tried to hunt down a sheet of corrugated iron, reasoning that the boys had up out shelter when it was wet. However, the sheet wasn't on rollers, but was nut there to stay, and Sam had to retire. But after reconnoitering the ground, the sheet of iron was carried more successful. Sam sustained a wound about two inches long on the left temple, caused by coming in contact with a sharp corner of the metal. However, never getting it dressed it is doing quite nicely and Sam is his old self again. I see the other Paisley boys occasionally except I. Watt, who is still in England. You will remember he was run over by a motor car just before we left England and had his leg broken. He is doing as well as can be expected. I had a letter from him not long ago, saying that he expected to be out with us in the near future. I saw Tom about two weeks ago, when we were in Divisional Reserve, but haven't heard from him since. I think I would hear if anything happened to him, as we are only about five miles apart. I have a cosy little dug-out here this time, nicely built. It is only six feet square, built of sandbags, has a corrugated iron roof, a wooden floor, and sports a large pane of glass for a window. Some class, eh? It is made to hold two, my companion, Sergt Spver, and myself. We carry a set of boxing gloves with us all the time, but of course we have to go outside when there is anything doing in that line. This is the muddiest country I ever saw. The clay holds the water as though it were greased. There doesn't seem to be any soakage to it at all. It is raining to-day as usual, and although we are back in reserve, it doesn't mean rest. Even to-day nearly all of our boys are up to the trenches on fatigue, drafting, etc. This is some life, believe me. But of course the first two or three years is the worst, they say. That sounds cheerful, doesn't it? Well, so long, old chap. Love to all from ANDREW.

Dr. Creelman on Rural Life

"Establishing a new point of view is the real vital rural problem at the present time," declared Dr. G. C. Creelman, of the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, in speaking at the Women's Institutes' Convention lately. "There is a concensus of opinion that something is radically wrong with country life, but if the farmers believed all that was said about their conditions, half their time would be spent on the mourners' bench. The problems are not those of rural deterioration, nor of rural degeneracy; farmers are not mentally or morally going back.

"To-day they are better housed, better fed, better clothed, better educated; crops are more easily handled and there is not the old drudgery attending a good deal of farm labor. Who would go back to the good times, when so many of these things were unattainable?

"There is much more production to-day, 19 per cent. more crops from the same soil than 20 years ago. It is not rural depopulation that is filling up the cities. There are four factors that go to filling up cities—first, the fecorporation of many adjoining small places; second, natural increase; third, little emigration, which is only from 10 to 15 per cent; and last, increase by immigration, which is 65 to 70 per cent.

"Neither is it production, because this year Canada has produced $250,000,000 more crops than the best year gone by.

"No, the stumbling block is the point of view. What is needed is enthusiasm to tackle the problem, to gain a new outlook on life, to see the possibilities of enjoyment and the satisfaction in things."

Here the speaker expressed his pity for the retired farmer who moves to the city, leaving his life-long friends in the country. Living with stern economy that precludes any idea of recreation as city people know it, he painted a word picture of the dreary life of enforced inactivity that the farmer leads, and then contrasted it with what a force he might be if he stayed on a corner of his farm in a comfortable house with conveniences, after he had given over the management to the son-in-law.

Here he could become the social leader, carry out his fads or theories regarding many things he had never had the leisure to experiment in. Farmers have never developed the sentiment of enjoying the fullest life in passing.

The farmer has neglected the social element, lives too much to himself, when he really should control the markets and the politics. He has not yet become class conscious for his own rights, and it is right here that Dr. Creelman urged the women to spur on their men to a more wholesome respect for themselves in becoming leaders of the people. It is now up to the women to be the real rural leaders.

They must get after the rural schools, start school yard days, tree-planting days. They must see that a capable teacher must not be lost to the country because of the niggardliness of the trustees, that might only mean $1.00 per head. Then they must get the viewpoint on the consolidation of schools. Education and social life must go hand in hand.

To-day the boys and girls are leaving the farm because of the meagreness of their lives. They must be changed and the women must supply the initiative. If it is left to the men they will fall.

As an instance that the rural districts should take more interest in things outside, Dr. Creelman told of a literature class at Macdonald College, where a class of 21 young women of an average age of 22, a third were able to answer correctly a list of authors of well known books, while a smaller percentage could answer where and what were Sudbury, Prince Rupert, Louvain and a few well known places, while practically all fell down on being asked to name six premiers in the Dominion. Among the answers were—Sir James Whitney as the Premier of Ontario, and Sir Adam Hughes as Premier of the United States.

Trespassing on G.T.R.

The G.T.R. Co. are issuing orders to all stationmasters, section foremen and others in charge of their property that rules regarding trespassing on their premises must be enforced. People who walk on the track for even a block are doing so at the risk of being prosecuted. Paisleyites have always felt themselves free to use the track as a highway, but now that the owners intend to have their property rights respected, it will be well to keep to the streets. Station agent Brigham or section foreman Gregg have no desire to figure as prosecutors against any citizens of the community, but since such explicit orders have been received from headquarters they are obliged to attend to trespass offenders in accordance with the desire of their employers. The railway company has been put to a great deal of trouble and loss at different points through the carelessness or design of those who frequent yards and tracks, so have reason to strictly enforce the law.

WHAT THE SOLDIER EATS

By "A Subaltern," in The Daily Mail, London

Rations at the front consist of five chief items—biscuits, cheese, jam, tinned meat, and tea. It might be thought that this fare day after day for week after week would become monotonous. But appetites remain keen, the items themselves are slightly varied, and the general verdict of the soldier in the trenches is that he is well fed.

Army biscuits are of three kinds—ordinary, brown and crackly, and buttons. The ordinary are the least appetizing; they are of a whitish brown hue, with no particular taste. They are, however, very much better than nothing, and with jam or a slice of bully beef quite good. The brown and crackly have a taste of porridge and brown sugar; they are very nice indeed, and pleasant to eat by themselves. The buttons have not much flavor but are fascinating little biscuits, small and fat—about the size round of a two-shilling piece. They are not often issued, but when they are the custom is to stuff one's pockets with them and dip into them throughout the day.

Cheese does not vary much. The richer kinds, such as Gorgonzola, are for obvious reasons not issued. At the front it would be impossible to extend the disciplinary measures which govern the issue of rams to the control of Gorgonzola cheese. The cheese issued is of the good plain dark yellow variety, and each man gets a handsome wedge a day.

Jam is issued in 1-lb. tins—a tin roughly to every seven men. The idea is that one man should carry the tin and the others share it with him at a chosen time. In practice men outside the "firm" join in the banquet and the tin is thrown away or kept for bomb manufacture. At a later hour in the day the ones who joined in produce a tin of their own, which the first firm shares and helps to empty. By this means the difficulty of carrying an open and half-empty tin of jam in the haversack is overcome. It has happened that in the excitement of an attack an opened tin of jam instead of a bomb has been thrown by mistake. Jam at the front is of many kinds—strawberry, raspberry, apricot, greengage, marmalade. The best known variety is "plum and apple."

Tinned meat also varies. There is Fray Bentos—generally known as "bully." This is pink, stringy, and of a salt flavor. When nothing else can be procured—as often happens—the men eat it gladly enough. Cut in slices on a biscuit it is quite palatable. But it is not a thing which anyone would eat out of sheer gluttony. Stewed with potatoes it is quite good, and this is the way the men generally have it when they are in billets or anywhere where they can cook. The French peasants near the firing line quite like Fray Bentos and get a good many tins given them.

An extremely succulent form of tinned rations is the McConachie. This is a tinned stew with a rich gravy and vegetables. The tin should be placed in boiling water and heated up for twenty minutes. When opened a delicious hot stew is found, ready cooked. One tin will make a good dinner for three men. Mistakes have been made in preparing this ration. On one occasion I saw a party of men with a tin of McConachie sitting by the fire. They had no water, so they had put the tin on the fire just as it was. Suddenly one of them exclaimed, "Blimy, Bill, look at that tin blowin' itself out!"

The tin was gently swelling in the heat. "Ere, prick it quick," said another; "it'll go off." The first speaker drew his clasp knife, knocked the tin off the fire and jabbed it with the blade. There was a shrill whistle and a jet of gravy steam shot into the air. The others danced with vexation at seeing the precious stew wasted. However, there was nothing for it, and nature had to take its course. When the steam had worked off the tin was cautiously opened and the men sat down to what was left of their meal.

Tea is generally issued as a combined ration with brown sugar, the tea and sugar being mixed up and served out together. Like the jam, the tea is issued to small firms, the principal of the firm carrying the tea wrapped up in a piece of paper or a handkerchief. When a chance occurs a bit of fire is lit, two or three canteens of water are set to boil, and when the water boils the tea and sugar are thrown into it; the tea is then drunk Chinese fashion, leaves and all. It is strong, and of course, sweet, but very warm and comforting on cold nights and mornings. There is nothing the men appreciate more than a drink of tea and they will make a brew on every possible occasion. Smoke gives away a position and draws artillery fire, so strict orders have to be given about the lighting of fires in the front trenches. The ordinary danger of a stray bullet from a sniper has no terrors, however, for a man who wants to make tea.

Men will get out of their trenches and start to make tea when little else would get them to leave cover. Some of the more confirmed teadrinkers carry little tins or cans which they have picked up somewhere. These little pots are black and grubby beyond description, but at the first halt the owner may be seen to slip his pot from its hook, hastily gather a few sticks by the roadside and start to brew. The men who carry these pots are well known to their company officers, for they are a source of danger to the others—in a night attack the pot may be heard rattling and clattering against the men's equipment for three hundred yards.

Rations on the firing line are generally issued in the small hours of the morning, when the regimental quartermaster, having received them from the supply column, brings them up from the second-line transport. Each company sends down a ration party, which brings back the rations by hand, and they are distributed to sections. The officers draw the same rations as the men, and in each company one officer is generally constituted officers' mess president and made responsible that the other officers get their rations. His task is not always easy, as the others object to being loaded up with a tin of bully, four biscuits, a bit of cheese (not wrapped in paper), a handful of tea, and so forth—and at the same time if they refuse to carry them, they blame the mess officer if they have nothing to eat at the end of the day.

"WIN-ONE MOVEMENT"

Inaugurated by Walkerton Methodist District Meeting at Eden Grove

On Thursday of last week the Methodist ministers of the Walkerton District and a representative number of laymen from nearly every circuit within its bounds met in conference at Eden Grove.

The object was to discuss means and formulate plans for an aggressive campaign along spiritual and missionary lines in every church. The conference was divided into two sections, viz: that of practical evangelism in which the discussion was led by Rev D A Walker and as a result of which it was recommended that every church inaugurate during the coming months the "Win-One Movement," by which it is hoped that at least five hundred new members will be added to the district church rolls before the end of the conference year in May.

The second section dealt with missions. Rev J H Arnup, Assistant Secretary of Foreign Missions, and H H Miller, Esq., of Hanover, delivered strong and inspiring addresses. Those present were enthused and it was decided that an earnest effort be made to increase, on every charge, the contributions to the missionary work of the church. The spirit of service and self-sacrifice for country and church was emphasized and all came away feeling that in this day of war and darkness and tumult the church of Christ has a great work to do, a great mission to perform, a work big and important enough to challenge the best in men.—Telescope.

—A generation ago a boy on an Illinois farm became deeply interested in geography. He tried to borrow a book on the subject, but the owner would not lend it. For two dollars that he had worked long and hard to earn, he hired the book for six weeks. Then he spent the long winter evenings copying the book from cover to cover. As best he could he reproduced every illustration and drawing in its pages. Of course, he mastered the book. Could anybody doubt that a boy with that passion to learn, and that doggedness of determination to master things, would go far in life? When he died a few weeks ago the world knew him as Sir William Van Horne, the builder of the great Canadian Pacific Railway.

A Lesson from the Clock

A CLOCK that strikes is better than a non-striking clock. It tells us the time through our ears as well as through our eyes. It saves us steps. It signals, spurs us on, rouses us, speaks to us in the dark and from far away. It is useful far beyond the usefulness of the silent clock.

So with a business that does any advertising. A shop or store that sends out its message to us in the form of advertisements in our newspaper serves us far beyond the shop or store that is silent—that must be visited before its service or merchandise can be known.

The shop or store that advertises saves our time any money, etc. Speaks to us at the right time, rouses us to attention, and stirs us to action. We buy more as the result of advertising, and we buy from advertisers.

FOOD IS SCARCE IN GERMANY

WOMEN WAIT ALL NIGHT FOR MARKET OPENING.

Aged Men and Women, as Well as Children, Clamor for Soldiers' Leavings.

In spite of the official assurance of the German Government that it is able to cope with all problems growing out of a shortage of food supplies, neutral travellers declare that the food crisis in Germany is most serious, says the New York Sun. The shortage in necessary articles of diet is acutely felt throughout the empire, and riots of grave proportions are occuring in the leading cities. These statements are borne out by the German newspapers. The Berlin Vorwaerts, the leading organ of the Socialists says: "In Berlin thousands of persons are battling daily for a small quantity of meat and lard. It is a battle when persons are compelled to expend time and strength all through the damp, cold autumn night waiting for a scrap of meat. Yet what happens to the thousands who day by day wait outside the shops in the municipal centre for the sale of meat and fat? Masses of people crush together long before the opening hour of places. As soon as the markets are opened they nearly tear the clothes off one another's backs in order to get the coveted treasure.

A Sample Episode.

"The crush at the corner of Eldena and Thaer streets is tremendous. When the municipality sells lard, frozen meats and fresh mutton. Numerous women, though repeatedly knocked down and injured, wait for hours. Thousands of would-be purchasers, mostly women, remain, some fainting, with fatigue, during the whole night, braving the cold and drenching showers. On the afternoon of Wednesday numerous women assembled to be in good time when they opened Thursday morning, but they were driven away by the police, and were not allowed to assemble again until evening. There were hundreds supplied with stools and hassocks, which they placed along the walls. Here they waited the live'ong night.

Thousands Not Served.

"The booths were opened and the sale went on until ten o'clock. The police let the people through the barriers in batches. At 9.30 there were about a hundred persons in the booths. No one is allowed in after these have been served. About a thousand still remained outside. These unfortunates had waited in vain all night in the street. Numerous women told us that for three or four nights they had been waiting patiently for the doors to open, but could never get forward in time. They had to go home each time with empty baskets. They complained of the unfairness of the methods employed in distributing supplies to favorites.

Women Fall in Fainting Fits.

"In another district in the northern part of Berlin, called the "Wedding City," there also have been established selling places for bacon, ham, fat and lard. At one of these the crowds gather early, though they are refused entrance until 5 o'clock. Owing to the length of time they are obliged to wait women collapse on the pavement and fall in faints. When the doors are opened the multitude simply stampede to the stalls where the fats and lard are stored, like a wild mountain torrent. The other day it was announced that the sale would take place only at 7 o'clock in the morning. Most of the women in the district did not know of the change, and assembled at the usual afternoon hour. There were hundreds of them. They would not go away although they were told of the change in the hour. Thus many waited all through the night. In half an hour every scrap of bacon and lard had disappeared from the market."

Leavings of Dinners.

The Taeglische Rundschau says: "Can nothing be done to end the pitiful spectacle of which the Berlin military depots and barracks are constantly the scene? Towards noon, day after day, a motley crowd assembles at the doors composed, not of soldiers, in field grey, but of shamefaced draftmen and women ancient, wrinkled, shrivelled little grandmothers, old men, young women and children armed with the most grotesque receptacles. They wait patiently for an hour and a half, sometimes in a pelting rain, until the cookhouse sweeper appears carrying a huge tin saucepan containing the leavings of the soldiers' dinner, pieces of fat meat and bone, bread, potatoes, and table offal of all kinds, an unspeakable, sloppy mess."

Butter and Egg Battles.

Further details of rioting at Aix-la-Chapelle, at Cologne, Coblenz and Treves are printed in the Rheinische Westfaelische Zeitung. We want no more butter-and-egg battles such as have disgraced the public market-place in this ancient Rhenish city," the newspaper says, "notwithstanding the provocation excessive prices of food may cause the average housewife. At the present rates, butter and eggs are placed entirely beyond the reach of the average citizen. A woman flung some butter into a dealer's face, thus opening the battle. Seizing horse radishes and carrots, men and women, salesmen and customers, bombarded each other with these missiles with such force that blood began to flow. Some of the combatants danced a war dance amid baskets of eggs. A horse, harnessed to a market wagon, was deliberately smeared all over with butter. Lumps of high-priced butter were stuck by the rioters in the hats of well-dressed women who had come to buy that commodity, with cries that: 'If we are unable to eat butter and eggs neither shall you.'"

Breweries May Close.

The Muenchner Neust Nachrichten says that the ruinous prices of malt and other materials required in the production of beer, "may compel the brewers to close down. According to the Berlin Lokal Anzeiger, the Prussian Government is about to issue comparative orders intended to stop the waste of milk and cream. The Government also will take the butter market in hand.

According to the Tageblatt, the commissariat arrangements to supply the German troops at Gallipoli have broken down hopelessly.

WHY GERMANY HATES U.S.

"We all know that Germany hates us," says the Ayrshire (Scotland) Post. "It is Germany's way. She does not do things by halves. She is always in the right. She has been able to persuade herself that she is the lamb in the midst of the wolves, that she has been forced to fight for her very existence. Likewise, that what would be crimes and dire offences if done by us, or by the French or Russians, are virtues of the highest order and approven of the gods of the Teutons in the highest degree when they are done by her. As for her venom-spewing against Great Britain, we have got so used to it as to be able to regard it on its higher side; as an evidence that Germany has substituted for any sense of humor she ever had, self-righteous sufficiency that stifles everything else with which it comes into conflict. She has torpedoed it, the same as she did the Lusitania; bombed it, the same as she did some Londoners and some London buildings. This blind hate, however, is not without its own reason. It comes not only from the superiority of the British Fleet that swept the sea of her ships, and caused her overseas dominions to vanish like mirages, but from the suffering that the lack of any foreign trade has made chronic to her. Hamburg and Bremen, great pre-war seaports, are closed and dead, the docks are idle, the big steamers are laid up, and the consequent rage of the people is the rage of the cornered rat." Countless factories and workshops are closed, the bread of the people is a little flour and a big compound of potatoes, and it cannot be had without daily bread tickets, one for breakfast, one for lunch, one for dinner. So every day the hate is nourished, and there is no chance of its being lessened. Not yet awhile in any case. When her needs have reached the last extremity point she will probably be commandeered into a softer attitude towards us. When it comes to that—well, it will be time to stiffen our backs and to weigh the real hate against the compelled appeal to our feelings."

SURVIVALS IN CLOTHES.

Some Styles of Servants' Costumes Are Familiar to Us.

By a large number of interesting survivals, says the London Times in its report of Mr. Wilfred M. Webb's lecture before the Ethnological Society, dress illustrates the innate conservatism of humanity.

Among these survivals is the hatband, the original purpose of which was to hold a piece of cloth or linen around the head. A picture exists of an Egyptian figure dated 3500 B.C., the headgear of which consists of a piece of linen, with a hand tied round it that terminates in two tails at the back. A survival of that is to be found in the tails of the present-day Scottish bonnet and of the sailor's cap. Again, the clocks on stockings were originally a species of ornamentation put on to hide the seams where the stuff was joined together. The "points" on the backs of gloves originally were strips of braid used to cover the seams in the gloves of early times.

Men of fashion, when they tired of particular suits of clothes, have always given them away to their servants, and the practice has resulted in some styles of servants' costumes familiar to us in modern days. The groom, for example, represents a gentleman of the beginning of the nineteenth century, and he still wears the belt that ladies used to hold on by when riding behind on the pillion. The footman, with plush breeches and powdered hair, is a gentleman of the time of George III.; the sheriff's coachman, with full-skirted coat and wig, is a gentleman of the time of George II.; and the Lord Mayor's coachman and suite are very fine gentlemen of the time of George III. In the twentieth century we hand on our evening clothes to the waiters who stand behind us at the dinner table.

CITY THAT RULED KINGS.

Alexander the Great's Frightful Revenge.

In ancient days the impudent wit of the young Graeco-Egyptian dandy was proverbial, says Mr. Arthur E. P. Brome Weigall in "The Life and Times of Cleopatra." That was especially true in Alexandria, whose people were characterized by the Emperor Hadrian as "light, wavering, seditious, vain, and spiteful, although as a body wealthy and prosperous."

No sooner did a statesman assume office or a king come to the throne than the wags of the city gave him some scurrilous nickname that stuck to him throughout the remainder of his life. Thus, Ptolemy IX. was called "The Bloated," Ptolemy X., "The Vetch," and Ptolemy XIII., "The Piper." Seleucus they named "Pickled-fish Peddler," and in later times Vespasian was named "Scullion." When King Herod Agrippa passed through the city on his way to his insecure throne, these young Alexandrians dressed up an unfortunate madman whom they had found in the streets, put a paper crown upon his head and a reed in his hand, and led him through the town hailing him as King of the Jews; and that in spite of the fact that Agrippa was the close friend of Caligula, their emperor. Against Vespasian they told with delight the story of how he had pestered one of his friends for the payment of a trifling loan of six obeli, and some one made up a song in which that fact was recorded. They ridiculed Caracalla for dressing himself like Alexander the Great, although his stature was below the average; but in that case they had not reckoned with their man. His frightful revenge upon them was the almost total extermination of all the well-to-do young men in the city, whom he collected together under a false pretense, and then butchered in cold blood.

THE GUELPH WINTER FAIR.

The Largest Live Stock Show Held in the Dominion.

From a small start in 1884 as a fat stock show for Guelph and vicinity there has developed the biggest purely agricultural exhibition in the Dominion.

At first only fat cattle were provided for. The classification has been enlarged from year to year, including first sheep then swine, later a dairy test and poultry were added. In 1909, a horse show was added, and this year a start is being made with breeding sections for cattle, sheep and swine.

The judging of poultry will be completed by Monday morning, Dec. 6th, and prizes placed on the coops, so that visitors will be able to note the prize winners. The dairy test will be completed and cards showing the result posted on Monday. As each class of horses, beef cattle, sheep and swine is judged, cards showing the catalogue number and the prize awarded will be put up on the stall or pen so that the ideals of the judges can be followed by the visitors. All beef cattle and dairy cattle will be stabled according to classes, and sheep and swine according to breeds.

The comfort of visitors has received considerable attention at the hands of the Fair Board, seating accommodation having been provided for seven hundred more people than in any former year.

There will be judging of horses every night from Saturday to Thursday. In addition, on Tuesday and Thursday evenings, there will be a competition for officers' chargers and a riding exhibition by the 20th Battery, which is stationed in Guelph.

A series of lectures will be delivered each day of the show upon live stock, poultry or seeds, and will be so arranged that the visitors will be able to hear the lecture and see all of the judging.

A new feature this year is a judging competition between the different counties of the province, each county being represented by three men picked by the District Representative.

TREASURED HEARTS.

That of Chopin's Is Now in Place of Safety in Moscow.

Before the Russians left Warsaw they sent away from that city its most precious relic, the heart of Chopin, which had been kept in a casket in the Church of the Holy Cross there since 1849. It is now in a place of safety at Moscow. Shelley's heart was also preserved in a casket. When the poet was drowned off Leghorn in 1822 his body was cremated by Byron, Leigh Hunt and Trelawny, and his heart rescued from the flames by the last-named.

When King Robert Bruce of Scotland died in 1329 his heart, too, was preserved in a casket. It was given to his friend, Sir James Douglas, to be buried in Jerusalem. On his way out to Palestine Sir James Douglas fell, fighting against the Moors in Spain, and as he fell he threw the precious relic before him in the battlefield, crying out, "Now pass onward as thou wert wont, and Douglas will follow thee or die."

The heart was found next day by Sir Simon Leigh, who brought it back to Scotland, where it was buried in the Monastery of Melrose, Scotland.

The Other—Well, that's enough to put any man wise.

HUGE NEW MONITORS.

British Craft Astonish the Turks at Dardanelles.

Ellis Ashmead Bartlett describes in the London Chronicle the new monitors employed by the British at the Dardanelles. He says:

"One afternoon there appeared at the entrance of Kephalos harbor an amazing looking object. She could hardly be said to steam up, but rather wobbled into port like a huge goose primed for Michaelmas. It was impossible to tell at the distance whether she was broadside on, showing her bows or her stern, for she seemed to be quite round. Her high sides held aloft an absolutely flat deck, on which nothing showed except the foremost turret, from which projected two guns of enormous girth and length; while rising from her centre like a giant of some Californian forest was a huge striped tripod bearing aloft a kind of oblong box.

"With great difficulty and steering wildly, she made her way through the crowded harbor and dropped anchor with the eyes of thousands riveted on her. No one had ever seen the like of her before. Sensation followed sensation. Her crew began to bathe, apparently all possessed of the divine power of walking on water, for on descending the ladder instead of plunging into the waves they walked along them by the side of the monitor, and, having thus distributed themselves, proceeded to dive in.

"We set off in boats to investigate this phenomenon. Just below the surface the monitor's sides jut out some 10 feet and then curve under, forming a platform, just washed by the waves. This is the mystery of these craft in which the naval instructor has concentrated his ingenuity to defeat the submarine. If a torpedo strikes the monitor's side it will explode amid a variety of substances which I must not mention, and the hull of the vessel will escape injury. These huge monitors carry naught but two 14-inch guns and some anti-aircraft armament.

"The first time one of these monitors went to the mouth of the Dardanelles she gave the old Turk a shock of surprise. Her guns go off with a terrible roar and carry more than three-quarters of a ton of metal 15 miles."

THE ENGLISH DESCRIBED.

Equipped with Victory and Terribly Tenacious.

Mr. John Galsworthy, the novelist, has a "diagnosis of the Englishman" in the Fortnightly Review:

Mr. Galsworthy thinks that for the particular situation which the Englishman has now to face he is "terribly well adapted."

"He does not look into himself; he does not brood; he sees no further forward than is necessary, and he must have his joke. These are fearful and wonderful advantages. . . From an aesthetic point of view the Englishman, devoid of high lights and shadows, coated with drab, and superhumanly steady on his feet, is not too attractive. But for the wearing, tearing, slow, and dreadful business of this war, the Englishman—fighting of his own free will, unimaginative, humorous, competitive, practical, never in extremes, a dumb, inveterate optimist, and terribly tenacious—is equipped with victory."

Bluejackets wear their "summer rig"—white caps and singlets—from May 1st to October 1st. During the rest of the year blue caps and jerseys are compulsory.

NO QUARTER ASKED.

Brief Story of Some Famous British Sea Battles.

There are no more thrilling stories in naval history than those of great sea duels, in which one ship has fought another until, with shattered bulwarks, the beaten vessel's ensign has fluttered down as signal of defeat.

Such a grim battle was that of the sturdy little frigate, Phoenix, with France's proudest warship, Didon, one August day in 1805. Thrice, the Didon poured in her shattering broadsides before a single British gun spoke; and it was only when the ships swung parallel, a pistol-shot apart, that the gallant little Phoenix opened fire, and broadside answered broadside, sweeping the decks with a tornado of destruction.

When, in the fury of conflict, the two vessels crashed together and neither could bring her guns to bear on the other, the Phoenix's men dragged their aftermost main-deck cannon to the cabin, and, through an improvised porthole, swept the Didon's deck again and again.

Thus, for half an hour the battle raged fiercely until the Phoenix at last broke away from the deadly embrace, a shattered wreck, her masts gone, her decks swimming with blood. Then she opened her broadsides again and poured in such a deluge of shot that within a few minutes, the Didon struck her flag in acknowledgment that she was beaten and could do no more.

Equally gallant was the Arethusa, a stumpy little British frigate, when she tackled the Belle Poule, of twice her size and crew, off Brest, in 1778. For two hours the Arethusa hung doggedly to the heels of the Frenchman, who vainly tried to shake her off; fighting every yard of the way until her masts tumbled a tangled wreck on her deck.

It was only when the Belle Poule struggled, like a broken-winged bird, into the shelter of a French harbor, that the Arethusa cut away her wreckage, and dragged herself reluctantly away from her prey.

As long as the British flag flies, the fame of Captain Broke and his stout little ship, Shannon, will be imperishable, for their gallant victory over the Chesapeake, America's finest war-vessel, off Boston, in June, 1813.

When Broke challenged the Chesapeake's captain to come out of harbor and fight him "to the death," the American skipper jumped at the invitation, a smile of amusement at the Britisher's impudence on his lips. Thirteen minutes after the first shots were exchanged the British flag was flying over his ship and he was a dying man.

At the first leaping into flame of the Shannon's side, her rival's deck was shattered from stem to stern, a hundred men were mown down, and her boastful captain mortally wounded. Then began such an inferno as the seas had seldom looked on. In six crowded minutes of the nether regions the Shannon was struck by 158 shots, her rival by 362; each vessel was "shattered to splinters." Then, with a follow me who can, "Broke leaped aboard the Chesapeake."

Before the swoop and thrust of British swords the American sailors fled panic-stricken, some leaping overboard, others rushing below, no man pausing in his terror to obey his dying captain's order: "Blow her up; blow her up." In thirteen minutes the battle was won, and the British flag was flying proudly over America's proudest warship.

DECORATED FOR THEFT.

Soldier Risked Life to Steal Orders of Enemy.

Some interesting sidelights on the life in the trenches are given in a letter to friends in Surrey, England, by Dr. Charles E. Petter of Thornton Heath, who is now with the forces in France. He writes in part:

"The senior captain is a doctor from Brixton, who evidently prefers killing to curing, as he is a fighting man. Having added the Heidelburg M.D. to his other diplomas he knows German well enough to detect the locality from which the owners of the voices in the German trenches come.

"Many times he has crept out after dark and crawling on his stomach under the barbed wire entanglements he has reached the German trenches, lying under the parapet and listening to their speech. Once, when discovered, he hurled a couple of bombs to give them something else to think about, then crept back to safety."

The same "fighting doctor," the letter tells, won the military cross for snatching a pocketbook from the edge of a German trench, where its owner had laid it while lighting his pipe. The pocketbook contained important instructions to German troops. The letter also tells of the youngest sub in the writer's trench creeping to the German lines and "capturing" a board on which was written, "Warsaw is taken." All British troops are itching for the word to go forward and longing for the great push," the letter concludes.

Joy Rider (stopped by rural constable)—Haven't we got any rights left in this country? Doesn't the constitution guarantee us life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness?

Selected Recipes.

Cream of Chestnut Soup.—Peel and blanch one quart of large chestnuts. Cook for one-half hour and rub through sieve. Add one quart white stock and a little chopped parsley. Blend one tablespoon flour with one tablespoon butter. Add to soup, stirring it briskly. Put through sieve again and serve with croutons of fried bread.

Nut Custard Pie.—Beat two eggs with one-half cup sugar and pinch of salt. Pour two cups hot milk over mixture. Stir until sugar is dissolved, strain, add one-half teaspoon or a little more of vanilla and one-half cup finely ground English walnuts, pecans or almonds. Pour into pie pan lined with pastry and bake in moderate oven. Nuts rise to top and form tender crust to pie.

Vegetable Soup.—Boil until tender in enough water to cover, one-half cup each diced celery and minced onion, and one cup each diced carrots and tomatoes. Press through sieve, add one cup each green peas, diced potatoes and diced turnips. Add more water if necessary and simmer vegetables until tender. Season with salt and pepper to taste, and add two tablespoons butter and a little milk.

Cranberry Pudding. — One quart cranberries, one quart stale breadcrumbs, two cups sugar, one-half cup orange juice, grated rind of one orange and two tablespoons butter. Butter two-quart pudding mold and put in alternate layers of crumbs, berries and sugar until dish is full, using layer of crumbs last. Dot with butter, pour orange juice over and sprinkle top with grated rind. Cover and bake thirty minutes. Uncover and brown. Serve with hard or liquid sauce.

Salmon Chowder.—One can salmon, three potatoes, three tablespoons butter or drippings, two slices onion, one-half teaspoon salt, one-eighth teaspoon pepper, three cups milk, three tablespoons flour, three crackers split. Remove bones of salmon, scale and flake fine. Pare potatoes and slice thin. Fry onion in fat, add flour, cook three minutes. Add two cups boiling water and potatoes. Cook until tender, about fifteen minutes; add seasoning, salmon and milk. Boil up once and serve garnished with minced parsley and crackers dipped in hot milk.

Graham Muffins.—One and one-quarter cupfuls of Graham flour, one cupful of flour, one cupful of sour milk, one-third of a cupful of apple syrup, three-quarters of a teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of salt, two tablespoonfuls of melted butter. Sift the dry ingredients and mix them; add the milk to the syrup, and combine the mixtures; then add the butter. Bake the muffins for twenty-five minutes in a hot oven, in buttered gem pans.

Boiled Apple Dumplings.—One pint flour, one-half teaspoon salt, one-half pound finely chopped suet, one-half teaspoon soda and sour milk enough to make stiff dough. Roll to one-half inch thickness and cut in squares. Pare and quarter apples, place four quarters in centre of each square, sprinkle liberally with sugar, and gather dough around apples, pinching together. Put in cloth and boil for two hours. Or steam without putting into cloth. Serve with hard sauce made of one cup sugar and two tablespoons butter beaten to cream, flavored with cinnamon. This is real English recipe.

Candy.—One and one-half cupfuls of sugar, one-quarter of a cupful of water, three tablespoonfuls of apple syrup, the white of one egg. Cook together the water and the sugar, without stirring it, until the mixture reaches a temperature of 248 deg. Fahrenheit. That is known as the "hard ball stage," at which a little of the syrup dropped into water forms a hard ball. Add the syrup, and reheat the mixture. Pour it into the well-beaten white of the egg, and beat it until the mixture will hold its shape. Drop it by teaspoonfuls on buttered paper.

Walnut Bars. — One-quarter of a cupful of butter or two tablespoonfuls of butter and two tablespoonfuls of lard, two tablespoonfuls of boiling water, one-quarter of a cupful of apple syrup, one-half of a teaspoonful of soda, one and one-half cupfuls of flour, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one and one-half teaspoonfuls of cinnamon, chopped walnut meats. Pour the water over the butter, then add the sugar, syrup mixed with soda, flour, salt, and spice. Chill the mixture, roll it one-quarter of an inch thick, cut it into strips three and one-half inches long by one and one-half inches wide, sprinkle it with the nut meats, and bake it ten minutes.

Helpful Suggestions.

When greasing a pudding mold always grease the cover as well as the mold.

A pail of boiling salted water should be poured down the kitchen sink every week to prevent its becoming stopped.

Ground coffee sprinkled freely amongst the fur or feathers of game when packed for travelling will keep it fresh.

When making puddings with eggs beat the yolks and whites separately and mix the whites as the last ingredient.

To turn out a pudding from the mold easily and without breaking plunge the mold into cold water for a moment.

Before home-made bread is put into the oven brush the tops of the loaves with butter and the crust will remain moist.

When making cakes add glycerin in the proportion of one teaspoonful to each pound of flour. This makes them light.

A use for cabbage water—Allow to cool, then pour on the ground. It is an excellent fertilizer for trees and rhubarb bushes.

Several tablespoonfuls of peanut butter creamed with the shortening are recommended for giving a novel and delicious flavor to cookies or any dark cake.

Good beef is of a rosy red color, with cream-colored, firm, elastic fat. It should be scarcely moist to the touch and should not be wet and flabby, either pale or purple in color.

To remove cakes easily from the tin, dredge the latter with flour after greasing. When the tin is removed from the oven stand it on a damp cloth for a minute, and the cake will slip out more easily.

When washing colored goods add vinegar in the proportion of a tablespoonful to a quart of water. It will brighten blue, green, red and pink goods which have faded, and prevent the color from running.

A substitute for horseradish sauce.—Boil a moderate sized turnip, then mash and beat in two teaspoonfuls of made mustard, a little lump of butter and thin down with a little milk. Heat in a lined saucepan. Served with roasted meat it cannot be distinguished from real horseradish sauce.

Ground cereals should be cooked with five times as much water as meal. Rolled oats and other rolled grain should be cooked with only twice as much water. Cereals are better if cooked at least one-half hour. Oat meal should be cooked at least three-fourths of an hour or one hour.

The shells of eggs should be carefully washed before they are broken and then they can be saved for the clearing of soups and jellies. Crush the egg shells, put them on a plate at the oven door until they are dry, then put in a glass jar. Before using, soak in cold water for 20 minutes. Four shells will clarify a quart of gellatin or an equal quantity of soup.

To clean a cheap alarm clock—Take off the bell and the two feet, and unscrew the keys used for winding. Then take the movement out of the case, dip a feather in benzine and with this rub out all the dust and fluff from the little holes where the axle works. Wipe off all dirt and benzine, carefully oil with a drop of pure sperm oil on the feather, all the arbors, but avoid letting oil come in contact with the balance spring, or the clock will run irregularly.

ANTI-TYPHOID VACCINE.

How the Preparation Is Made at a French Institute.

A recent article in La Nature describes how anti-typhoid vaccine is prepared in France at the Institute of Valde-Grace, where Doctors Chantemesse, Vidal, and Vincent have done such remarkable work for humanity in the great field of protective medicine. The vaccine is polyvalent; that is to say, it is a blend made, not from one, but from many different strains of Bacillus typhosus. The vaccine is sterilized by the momentary application of ether, and contains no living elements. It is put up in small ampoules, or glass vials, in sets of three, each of which contains one billion dead typhoid bacilli. At every stage in the preparation of the vaccine, aseptic methods are most vigilantly enforced. The article warmly praises the workers: "Only those who have lived at the laboratory from September, 1914, to the early months of the present year can have any idea of the activity that prevailed there, and of the indefatigable zeal of all, men and women, mobilized and voluntary workers — directors of laboratories, preparators, Red Cross ladies, hospital orderlies, all working together."

Pat's Problem.

Sentence was about to be pronounced on an Irishman for theft. "And it is upon the oath of them two witnesses your honor is going to condemn me?" asked Pat. "Certainly," said the judge. "Their testimony was ample to convince the jury of your guilt." "Oh, murther," exclaimed Pat. "To condemn me on the oath of two such spalpeens who swear they saw me take the goods when I can bring forth a hundred who will swear they didn't see me do it."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, DECEMBER 5.

Lesson X.—Uzziah's Pride and Punishment. 2 Chron. 26. Golden Text: Prov. 29. 23.

1. The Fame of Uzziah (Verses 8-10).

Verse 8. Gave tribute—See 1 Kings 4. 21; 10. 25; 2 Chron. 17. 11. Part of the tribute which the Ammonites gave Uzziah was evidently a right to pasture his cattle in the Ammonite country (see verse 10).

9. The corner gate—Probably the gate at the northwest angle of the city where the north wall approached the Valley of Hinnom (see 2 Kings 14. 13).

The valley gate — The modern "Jaffa" gate which leads to the Valley of Hinnom.

10. Built Towers — Primarily for defense from marauding bands.

The wilderness—To the south and southeast of Jerusalem, extending from the western shores of the Dead Sea toward Beersheba.

Hewed out many cisterns — Reservoirs cut into the natural rock and covered at the top except for a small aperture. These were for storing the rainfall. Many remains of such are encountered by the traveller in Palestine to-day.

The lowland — The maritime plain to the west of Jerusalem between the hills of Judæa and the sea.

The plain—The rich grazing land beyond the Jordan, on the plateau of Gilead.

II. His weakness (verses 15-21).

15. Marvellously helped—See verse 7.

16. His heart was lifted up—His pride became strong.

To burn incense — None but the priests were allowed to celebrate this rite. Hence Uzziah's transgression (verse 18).

17. Azariah the priest—The high priest (verse 20).

With him fourscore priests—Uzziah doubtless had a large retinue with him. Azariah, therefore, takes a strong following, to withstand Uzziah with force if necessary.

19. The leprosy brake forth in his forehead—Gehazi was thus suddenly afflicted (see 2 Kings 5. 27).

20. They thrust him out quickly—His own men thrust him out, for death was the penalty (see Num. 18. 7; 18. 31-35). And they wanted to get him away from the incense altar as quickly as possible, so as to escape the penalty.

SENSES OF TREES.

Perseverance of a Poplar in Surmounting Obstacles.

Mr. James Rodway who is the curator of the British Guiana Museum and an eminent botanist, declares that plants have at least three of our five senses—feeling, taste and smell—and that certain tropical trees smell water from a distance and will move straight toward it.

But trees not in the tropics can do as well. A resident of an old Scotch mansion, says a writer in the Scotsman, found the waste pipe from the house repeatedly choked. Lifting the slabs in the basement paving he discovered that the pipe was completely encircled by poplar roots. They belonged to a tree that grew some thirty yards away on the opposite side of the house.

Thus the roots had moved steadily toward the house and had penetrated below the foundation and across the basement until they reached their goal, the waste pipe, a hundred and fifty feet away. Then they had pierced a cement joining and had worked their way in. There seems something almost human in such unerring instinct and perseverance in surmounting obstacles.

MEANING OF HALF-MAST.

A Sign That the Dead Man Was Worthy of Universal Respect.

Perhaps you have noticed that whenever a prominent person dies, especially if he is connected with the Government, the flags on public buildings are hoisted only part of the way up. This is called "half-mast." Did you ever stop to think what connection there could be between a flag that was not properly hoisted and the death of a great man? Ever since flags were used in war it has been the custom to have the flag of the superior or conquering nation above that of the inferior or vanquished. When an army found itself hopelessly beaten it hauled its flag down far enough for the flag of the victors to be placed above it on the same pole. This was a token, not only of submission, but of respect. In those days, when a famous soldier died, flags were lowered out of respect to his memory. The custom long ago passed from purely military usage to public life of all kinds, the flag flying at half-mast being a sign that the dead man was worthy of universal respect. The space left above it is for the flag of the great conqueror of all—the angel of death.

FINED FOR MISSING WORK.

Munition Workmen Must Pay Damages to Employers.

That certain Sheffield (England) munition workmen have not realized their line of duty in these times, was evidenced at the Sheffield City Police Court, when Mr. W. B. Esam and Mr. W. R. Carter had to deal with many serious cases of alleged slacking on the part of employes of Sheffield firms, now engaged on work for the fleet and the army.

B. Burdekin, solicitor for one of the companies, stated that in three months 370 men lost 15,000 hours. Allegations of periodical drinking bouts were not infrequent, while it was proved that the men were often wont to take time off as they pleased.

Dr. Hadfield (Doctor of Metallurgy) gave evidence in support of his firm's cases, and appealed to the bench to deal strictly with the delinquents.

Horace W. Walker was summoned for £7 4s. damages for neglect of work on eight days. The bench awarded damages amounting to £5 7s. 6d. Mr. Burdekin stated that the damages were not the point in the summonses. The money went into the firm's war funds.

Charles Smith was summoned for losing 104½ hours, and the company asked for £9 4s. damages. Mr. Burdekin stated that the defendant had periodical bouts of drinking. Defendant said he had been suffering from gout. The bench awarded £6 and costs. William Henry Wake was summoned for £4 9s. damages for 81 lost hours, and was ordered to pay £2 2s. and costs. T. Townton, a blacksmith's striker, for neglecting his work through drink, for eight days, was ordered to pay the £1 with costs, 7s. 6d. John H. Howson and J. Green were each fined £1 for losing a day's work. George Neill was ordered to pay £5 damages. Charles Chaple was ordered to pay £4 damages for nine lost. Samuel Coldwell, a moulder, was ordered to pay £3 and costs for losing time, and Robert Jennings was ordered to pay £5 and costs.

POPULATION OF IRELAND.

An Increase Last Year Over the Previous Year.

The report of the Registrar General of Ireland for 1914 shows that Ireland's decline in population has been arrested and also her prosperity increased if the number of marriages is a criterion. Last year shows a population of 4,381,328, against 4,379,012 the previous year, with the lowest emigration rate since 1851. Marriages gained 33 per cent. over 1913. Improvement is shown in the matter of illiteracy, which is rapidly dying out. The figures of husbands and wives who signed the registrar instead of making their mark give 94.0 for husband and 90.4 for wives.

"As regards illegitimacy, Ireland compares favorably with most countries," says the report. There were only 3 per cent. of illegitimate births in the whole country. Ulster showing the highest rate of any county at 4 per cent. and Connaught the lowest at .7. The general birth rate shows a slight increase.

A drop of .6 per cent. in the death rate is also noted, "old age" heading the list of causes, with tuberculosis as second. Last year's death rate was 16.3 the thousand.

HAPPY YULE FOR TOMMY ATKINS

CHEER FOR BRITISH SOLDIERS IN THE TRENCHES.

Many Funds Started in England Expected to Reach Total of $8,000,000.

Santa Claus is making ready for a dizzy whirl to the lines of the British soldiers at the front. His thousands of agents in Great Britain are busily at work now, accumulating the things Santa will leave for the fighters on the battlefields, writes a London correspondent.

He starts his gigantic trip by calling on the soldiers in Belgium, and from there goes on through to France and the Balkans. He won't skip any of the men in khaki.

Christmas in the trenches is to be the biggest thing Britain can make it. A score or more of organizations are hard at it getting funds with which to buy all manner of things to cheer up the British Tommy and let him know the folk at home are always thinking of him.

Newspapers are running Christmas funds, and the public response has been hearty. Already, with the funds scarcely two weeks going, approximately $150,000 has been raised; but a tremendous lot more is needed to accomplish all that Great Britain wants to do for the soldiers in the field. It is calculated that approximately $8,000,000 either in money or articles contributed will be needed to round out a proper Christmas.

While a fund of $8,000,000 may look formidable, it won't be so difficult to get. The newspaper funds, it is estimated, will produce well over $2,000,000 of it, while private cash donations to the various organizations, together with contributions of articles that will begin to flow in within a month's time, will make up the rest.

Queen Alexandra, always alert to every move in aid of her countrymen is patroness of one organization that is devoting itself to accumulating articles of wearing apparel, such as stockings, mufflers and handkerchiefs, badly needed by the soldier in the bitterly cold weather. This organization, of which Lady Paget is a member, has already obtained enough to fill 10 cupboards of stuff for Santa to carry along with him.

Other organizations working along the same lines have the support of the Duchess of Manchester, the Duchess of Marlborough, and many other wives of titled Englishmen. When the final accumulations of all of these aides to Santa Claus have been completed it is expected that every soldier in the trenches will find some useful gift of wearing apparel deposited in his dug-out on Christmas Day.

That is not all. Every soldier at the front is to get a Christmas box with these things in it: Half a pound of tobacco, two pounds of candy, a plum pudding, 100 cigarettes, and a box of chocolates.

It may be that the boxes will be even more plentifully filled. All depends on how much money is forthcoming. The Christmas box as planned now costs each donor $1.25. That is the rock-bottom, wholesale price; to buy the same thing at retail would cost $2.25. The wholesalers have put the figures down as their share of the Christmas fund, and all of them are giving handsome cash donations besides.

Christmas fund matinees are now making their appearance at the theatres, and a good deal of money is obtained in that way. The actors not only give their services gratis for these matinees, but are sending along cash contributions as well.

Sir Herbert Tree heads a group of actor-managers who are helping the Christmas project. Harry Lauder is another. In sending his "bit" to the fund the Scotch comedian wrote: "If any Britisher this Christmas deserves a good Christmas, it's our men at the front."

Churches throughout the British Isles are having sewing bees and taking up collections for the various Christmas funds. Business houses, department stores, small shops—all are helping swell the flow of silver and gold to buy the huge stack of gifts for the men fighting for the colors.

It is reported that to assist Santa in getting the many tons of thousands of Christmas boxes to the trenches the railroad and steamship lines are to be out at his disposal. Boxes will, so it is said, be started to the Balkans and the Dardanelles within a few weeks, so Santa will find them all there, ready to drop into the trenches.

Just to Encourage Him.

A man on a walking tour in Ireland on a hot summer day accosted two laborers working in the road with, "How far is it to Ballysilhereen?" "Sure it's just a mile and a half, your honor," said one of the men. The pedestrian passed on, and the man who had not spoken said to his companion, "Sure, Pat, how could you tell him it's only a mile and a half when you know it's six miles?" "Och, well," replied Pat, "the poor spoon looked so tired that I told him it was a mile and a half just to encourage him."

Miss Tena Cole, who is attending collegiate in Toronto, has joined the orchestra there. She has splendid musical ability, which has been recognized and will be further developed.

The local Red Cross meets on Friday of this week in the church on Mr John Hyde's farm, to sew for the boys at the front.

Particulars of the marriage of Mr W E Bean, of Weyburn, Sask, formerly of this line, are to hand. The event took place at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr and Mrs Cathon, near Tressacks, Sask, on Nov 17th. Both the young people have been in Weyburn for some time. Mr Bean is proprietor of the Rialto barber shop. The young couple have taken up residence in a new home on 6th St. A number of Mr Bean's friends sent up to the house during his absence two very handsome chairs. The bride was also the recipient of many useful presents from her friends.

A Nice Crop

Old John, as we will call him, has a very sarcastic tongue and his son—a young fellow with a rooted objection to work—is well aware of the fact. The other morning the young man was lying on his back in the plot of ground he calls his garden, when old John strolled up. "Well, father," began the son, raising himself on one elbow and lazily surveying the weed-covered patch, "what do you think of it?" "Why," replied John, slowly, "if you're growing food for yourself, and yourself only, there's nothing much to grumble at. It's a nice crop." "Eh?" gasped the young man. "Nice crop! Of what?" "Thistles!" came the stinging retort. "It's a nice crop, I say, and it ought to last one donkey all winter."

WALKERTON

Through the efforts of Mr John Rowland, the Dominion Government was induced to refund the Walkerton Military Day Committee the $360 which they paid out in railway fares for the bringing of the soldiers here for the recent big military demonstration. The money was refunded on the understanding that it be donated to patriotic purposes, and with a view to distributing this fund a public meeting of the citizens was held in the town hall on Tuesday evening last when after a thorough discussion of the matter it was decided to apportion the coin as follows: $150 to go to the Daughters of the Empire, $50 to the ladies of the Soldiers' Aid Tea Room, $50 to the Women's Institute of Walkerton, and $60 to the local Red Cross Fund.

A gentleman who advertised in this paper last week for a stenographer and who had the applications sent in case of the Herald-Times office, was fairly deluged with replies from young ladies in town and surrounding country seeking the job. On the other hand advertisements for girls to do housework have brought very slim response, thus showing that the trend of the young ladies of to-day is from the kitchen to the office. And there's a reason which mistresses of homes, who are so disgruntled over the servant girl famine, should consider before passing judgment at the next push to over what they are pleased to term as the nonsense of the foolish virgins. The fact that girls in offices and factories have shorter hours and acknowledge no boss between quitting time and the starting hours again isn't probably the real reason why girls are forsaking the house for the shop. If we were asked to define the chief cause of the transition we would unhesitatingly say "self respect." The stenographer is introduced by her employer as Miss So-and-so and is made to feel, before strangers at least, that she is about the social equal of her boss. On the other hand, the mistress in the home talks almost invariably about her help as "our maid," "our servant," etc, and so makes the girls feel as if they were of inferior clay and were only humble vassals under the master and servant plan of the old feudal system. The girls don't like it and hence they drift towards the office and factory, where they are "Miss" and not "Our," and where they are referred to as a separate individual and not as a private chattel.

Gordon A Bonter, the man who is alleged to have stung so many Walkerton people by selling them shares in an imaginary coal mine in Melancthon township, was hauled before Magistrate Tolton in the police court here on Monday afternoon when several of the local victims testified against him in a manner that would almost make a listener groan. From the evidence adduced it would seem that Henry Stoddard, the owner of the farm in which the supposed coal mine was located, had been picking up pieces of coal off the field at different times ever since he bought the farm some thirteen years ago. In the summer of 1913 it appears a Mrs Frost, of Buffalo, visited at the Stoddard farm and on returning to Buffalo mentioned about the coal to Miss Mary McNeil of Paisley and Bonter, who were seemingly running in her house. Bonter went up to Stoddard's to investigate and this man showed him these bits of coal. Then Bonter brought a man named Slater to the place and also a Scotchman who said he had been working in coal mines in Wales, and that this was good coal. Miss Mary McNeill, who is a cousin of Misses Kate and Isabella McKinnon of Walkerton, wrote them about the coal, and then Bonter came over here and told them that he had examined it and that it was first class coal, in fact equal to the Welsh coal. He said as they were relatives of Miss McNeill he was going to let them in on the ground floor and told them the more they invested the richer they would become, and held out prospects of them becoming wealthy immediately wealthy. Misses Kate and Isabella Thompson each put in $300. They invited Miss Mary Glendenning over to tell her about it while Bonter was there. Miss Glendenning attended, and Bonter also succeeding in getting her to put in several thousand. He said if she did she would become immensely wealthy. She said she wasn't aspiring to great riches as according to biblical teaching riches on earth were not to be desired. He asked her if she was a good hand at reading characters, and she said she was credited with it, at which Bonter got a little bit fussy, took out a cigar and asked if he could smoke it. She said No, as she had never given permission to anyone to smoke in her presence. He walked outside and smoked and returned again. She said she was willing to put in $100 or $200, but Bonter said he would not let her in unless she put in several thousand. He went out and smoked several cigarettes and when he came back she told him that she didn't think a person could indulge in cigarettes and have a moral bias. However, it appears, she put in $100 and went out later to see the mine and saw two or three little bits of coal, which they showed her. She went around and hunted but couldn't find anything around on the farm, but they gave her two or three pieces out of a box and she brought a piece home with her. It was the said, like every day coal. Miss Kate McKinnon also went over to see the mine and was somewhat disappointed, as they had not started to work it as Bonter had promised. She and her sister later took proceedings in Toronto to recover their money, but Bonter, they claim, promised to refund them as soon as he could get his money out of some coal mine in the States. Mr Ed Gibson, who testified, said that Bonter had sold his wife $800 in shares for herself and son Mack, and the next day had returned to their home and sold him a $100 share. He told them he had sold shares to sixteen of the leading people in town. The magistrate on hearing the evidence sent Bonter up for trial. He will appear before Judge Klein on Saturday morning next at 10 o'clock.—Herald and Times.

Selected Recipes.

Baked Pork Chops.—Into deep baking dish slice layer of raw, pared potatoes, dust with salt and pepper and dot lightly with butter. Repeat until dish is two-thirds full. Pour in enough sweet milk to cover potatoes, place over top layer of lean pork chops, season with salt and pepper, cover and bake until chops are tender and potatoes are creamy.

Vegetable Hash.—One-half cup chopped carrots, one cup chopped potatoes, one-half cup chopped turnips, two cups chopped cabbage, one cup chopped beets, two tablespoons beef fat, one-fourth cup milk or hot water, few drops of lemon juice, salt and pepper. Melt fat in frying pan. When hissing hot, pour in above ingredients, mixed; spread evenly, cover and cook slowly one-half hour. Fold, turn and serve.

Baked Cup Custards.—Two cups hot milk, two eggs, one-fourth cup sugar, one-half teaspoon caramel or gratings of nutmeg. Beat eggs until yolks and whites are mixed, add sugar, salt and flavoring, then gradually add hot milk. Strain through wire strainer into teacups or individual baking dishes, set these in pan of lukewarm water and bake in slow oven until custard is firm. Test by inserting silver knife at centre of custard. If custard is done knife will come out without any milk and egg clinging to it. Serve in same cups or turn out on small plates.

Macaroni Timbales.—Six ounces of leftover meat, four tablespoons breadcrumbs, one egg, one tablespoon stock, one teaspoon each of mushroom catsup and Worcestershire sauce, two ounces boiled macaroni, cut in one-inch pieces. Mix crumbs and meat well together. Add stock, seasoning and sauces; mix well, add egg, well beaten. Have ready small pudding molds. Line with boiled macaroni, fill with mixture, press closely and cover. Stand molds in boiling water up to two-thirds their heights. Cover and boil one hour. Turn from molds and serve. Leftover vegetables may be substituted for meat.

Bake Haddock and Oysters.—Good-sized haddock, two cups oysters, one-fourth cup butter, one tablespoon chopped parsley, one cup cracker crumbs, salt and pepper. Drain oysters and mix crumbs, melted butter and parsley. Season highly with salt and pepper and mix. Remove head and tail and bone haddock, season with salt, pepper and lemon juice. Stuff with oyster stuffing and sew. Place on a dish sheet or strips of cheesecloth in baking pan, dot with butter, season and bake, allowing twelve minutes to pound. Baste often with melted butter, or after fish is stuffed, place in pan, cover with buttered cracker crumbs and baste. Serve garnished with parsley.

Braised Beef.—Two pounds sticking piece of beef, one cup diced carrots, one cup tomatoes, one-half cup diced celery, one tablespoon salt, two teaspoons sugar, one-eighth teaspoon each of white pepper and paprika, one tablespoon flour, one tablespoon caramel. Wipe meat with piece of wet cheesecloth, put into braising pan (double roast pan), with vegetables, salt, pepper and two cups boiling water. Put on cover and place in hot oven. After one hour add one cup water and reduce heat of oven. Bake two hours. Remove meat to large platter; to the gravy add the flour, mixed with a little cold water and the caramel. Boil three minutes. Pour over meat and garnish with parsley. Serve with border of boiled rice. Enough for six helpings.

Cake Hints.

A gilled pinch of salt improves any cake.

Half water, instead of all milk, makes a lighter cake.

If your cake rises in a mountain in the middle, the reason is your dough was too thick.

If it goes down in the middle, your dough was too rich—too much sugar.

The cause of large holes in cake is too much baking powder.

To sprinkle flour in greased pans prevents cake from sticking.

Useful Hints.

Less sugar is required if a pinch of bicarbonate of soda is added when stewing fruit.

Many expensive preparations cannot equal root ginger for removing toothache. Chew a piece slowly, and in a short time the pain will go.

The most economical method of preparing potatoes is to cook and serve them in their skins, thus preserving their full flavor and valuable salts.

Your eyeglasses will not steam if they are dipped in soapy water and wiped dry. There will be a film of this on the glass, which keeps them from steaming.

To prevent cheese getting mouldy, place a lump of sugar on the cheese dish, changing every few days. This draws out the moisture and keeps the cheese fresh.

To lessen the noise in a busy household, or for an invalid's room, cut neat circles from old rubber heels or old bicycle tyres, and glue them firmly to the legs of chairs and tables.

Handles of all new tools, such as hoes, forks, spades, etc., should be oiled when first purchased. Two coats of linseed oil applied hot will make them last better, and there will be less breakage in this kind.

To mend a hole in a lace curtain, take a piece of paper, place it over the hole, and work down and across with the sewing-machine. When the curtain is washed the paper will drop out, and the darn cannot be seen.

After wearing new boots or shoes for a day or two, apply with a flat brush an even coating of mastic varnish to the soles and heels. Let it soak in thoroughly, and dry. Repeat the process from time to time, and the hardened sole will outwear the uppers.

To mend a hole in an umbrella, take a piece of black court-plaster, cut to the size required, and place it carefully under the hole on the inside. When dry, the patch will be scarcely visible. Vaseline injected into the hinge portion of the frame is a sure preventative of rust.

So many tastes sweet pickles are far more acceptable than acid ones, and they always seem much more of a dainty than the sharper sort. If tender and well sweetened and spiced they often seem like delicious preserves.

Pieces of bread may be dried in the oven and crushed to make bread crumbs. These can be stored and used to sprinkle on cheese and other dishes. Uncrushed they may be served with any soups. Odd pieces of bread and crusts may be soaked and used in puddings, stuffing, etc.

When towels are wearing thin join two together, and make one strong towel. They should be as nearly alike as possible, of course. Corresponding threads on under and upper towels are not always equally worn, and by darning over worn parts they may be made to last a long time.

THE FOREST'S PRIME-EVIL.

By Jas. Lawber.

A man there was and he let his fire
Burn down his neighbor's shed,
But he was tried and sent to jail,
And "Served him right" they said.

Oh, years he spends at breaking stone,
And he sleeps on a soft plank bed
For carelessly burning his neighbor's fence
And his fifty-dollar shed.

A man there was and he let his fire
Burn down a forest wide;
Millions of dollars went up in smoke,
Thousands of animals died.

Settlers rushed from burning homes,
Some were burned in their beds;
And to-day o'er the place where this was done
A deathlike desert spreads.

And the man went back to his distant home
With a buck and a hunting tale,
And none of his neighbors rose to remark
That he ought to be sent to jail.

A fool there is and his name is US,
As the blindest man can see;
If it's jail for the man who burns a shed
While the burner of forests goes free.

FRENCH PENSION BILLS.

Mothers and Widows of Soldiers Will Benefit by New Bill.

Two important reforms are proposed in French pension bills that the pension committee has reported favorably. The pensions of widows are to be increased proportionately to the number of orphans, and pensions will be granted to mothers for the loss of sons who were their main support.

The rates provided for the new law are from 563 francs ($112) for widows of private soldiers, running from that figure through the various grades up to 5,250 francs ($1,050) a year for the widow of a general of division, these figures being subject to increase in the case of orphans. If the soldier or officer died of wounds not received in battle or of disease contracted while on duty, the pensions run from 375 francs ($75) to 3,500 francs ($700) a year.

No statistics of the number of killed and maimed in the French army are available to the public, but the indications given by Monsieur Masse, who knows, are to the effect that France's pension burden will be heavier than that of the United States after the Civil War.

The less brains a man has the easier it is for him to lose his head.

GRECIAN HIGHLANDERS IN PICTURESQUE DRESS

TEA TIME AT COLLEGE.

Tea time at college, just at candle light, is perhaps the most enjoyable time of the day. The lonely girl from the West meets the lonely girl from the East, and friendships spring up which often endure through life. Many and varied are the topics of conversation at these late afternoon gatherings—clothes, of course, come in for a large share of attention, and often a girl with a small clothes allowance is given a hint or two which helps her to improve her appearance with little added cost.

College and boarding school girls often enjoy an hour or two sewing now and then; it varies the monotony of study and enables them to add effective little touches of their own to frock and blouse, rendering them somewhat different, and more suited to their own personality. At tea the other afternoon, one girl wore a simple serge jumper frock made with short full skirt and sleeveless overblouse and an underwaist of dark blue crepe Georgette veiling, emerald green crepe Georgette. The guimpe was made with a high collar finished at the top with a tiny frill of white; and closed straight down the front with small dull gold buttons. Narrow black moire ribbon formed the girdle, closing on the left side in a small flat bow with long streaming ends. Six bands of the moire ribbon had been set on to the skirt at graduated intervals, giving the effect of flounces, and adding wonderfully to the appearance of the simple frock. The ribbon, which the wearer had herself applied, made the commonplace dress most attractive and original.

The simplest frocks or blouses may be made attractive and becoming by adding contrasting cuffs, or an unusual collar; these may be made removable and others substituted at will, thus achieving a pleasing change when the dress is becoming somewhat worn. It is an easy matter to fashion any number of three contrasting sets from bits of velvet, or ribbon (which is at the height of popularity for trimmings of all sorts just now), crepe Georgette, or chiffon. Nothing is softer or more becoming than a hemstitched collar of crepe or chiffon, it will add a dressy look to the plainest of costumes. There is a great choice in girdles, too, this winter. One of the popular notions is the narrow band of velvet, faille, or picot edged moire ribbon, drawn around the waist and tied in long coiled flat bows.

Perhaps the greatest number of possibilities for varying the simple dress, when one has a limited supply of clothes, lie in the guimpe. These, as a rule are charmingly simple, depending for effect upon the color contrast, the soft sheerness of the material, and perhaps a button or two, or a jewelled buckle by way of trimming. The everyday dress of serge, taffeta, or broadcloth may have a variety of these guimpes for all hours of the day—for morning wear there will be one of plain black satin or taffeta; for afternoon and informal evening affairs, club luncheons, and teas, a guimpe of crepe Georgette, chiffon cloth, or net, in a harmoniously contrasting shade will render the costume dressy enough and most becoming.

Another convenience is the three-piece, semi-tailored suit consisting of coat and skirt, combined with blouse of satin, chiffon-cloth, crepe de Chine or other contrasting material, in the same color or a shade that combines well with the color of the suit. A suit like this is easily fashioned at home, as there is absolutely no sign of the old-time tailored stiffness, padding, and various other things which a few seasons ago made the idea of fashioning a coat at home so alarming. The touch of fur which is so much a part of these suits just now, renders them smart and becoming, as well as warm. Among the novelties noticed on many of these fur trimmed suits is the "muff cuff." These are wide and flaring, made of fur or a fur fabric, and arranged so that the hands may be slipped into them quite as one would use a muff. This idea is especially practical for the suit for shopping or general wear, also for the heavy coat, as there is no danger of losing a valuable muff.

Showing the Muff Cuff.

While speaking of the muff it is interesting to note that the muff cord or chain is again in favor. One sees it often; knotted satin and moire ribbon often form the cord; the regulation twisted silk cord is favored too, and the jewelled chain is smart and effective. Fur trimmed petticoats and pantalettes are among the season's startling novelties; while the idea is somewhat ridiculous, a glimpse of the fur edged petticoat showing beneath the heavy suit is nevertheless attractive and fetching.

Sir John Miltanke, V.C., who was recently killed in action in the Dardanelles, had of late years made a special study of finance. He is one of the few distinguished soldiers who have done so.

King George is on more intimate and friendly terms with the Tsar than with any other European monarch. For many years past the two sovereigns have corresponded with each other very regularly.

Sir Percy Girouard suffers somewhat from indigestion, and lives on the simplest fare. The malady was induced from his habit of working at meals, especially at dinner. He used to have placed beside him at dinner a small writing-pad and pencil, and during the meal he would work out the most complex calculations, no doubt much to the benefit of the great armament firm to which Sir Percy belongs. But this method of work soon told its tale on Sir Percy Girouard's digestive organs.

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, DECEMBER 12.

Golden Text; Hos. 11, 4.

1. The Waywardness of Israel (Verses 1-7).

Verse 1. My son—Egypt, Assyria, and Phœnicia were all powerful nations with proclivities and possessions which Israel could not command. Yet God passed them over and called puny Israel when yet a child to be his son (compare John 1. 12-13; 1 John 3).

Out of Egypt—The prophets and Psalmists, as well as the historians, never let Israel forget how God called them from their misery in Exypt to their well being in Palestine.

2. The more they went from them—Israel was favored with the best teachers to instruct them. But the more they were taught the more wayward they became. God's bounty was too prodigal for them.

3. I took them on my arms—As a loving father would take a disobedient child.

4. As they that lift up the yoke—The picture is that of a team of bullocks driven by a kind driver. Israel is pictured not as "wanton young cattle . . . which need the yoke firmly fastened on their neck, but a team of toiling oxen mounting some steep road." They are not driven from behind, but drawn from in front. No man can come to me," saith Christ, except the Father draw him."

7. My people are bent on backsliding from me—Hosea sees that kindness, as such, will not prevail. Stern er discipline is necessary.

II. The Enduring Love of God (Verses 8-11).

8. How shall I give thee up?—Hosea's optimism, born of his faith and love, cannot let him see God casting Israel off. God's mercy is exhaustless. No sin of man can enchain it nor use it up.

As Admah . . . as Zeboim—Obscure cities of the plain (Deut. 29. 22, 23).

9. I will not execute the fierceness of mine anger—Justice will be tempered with mercy.

11. I will make them to dwell—They will finally weary of their waywardness, they will smart under the lash of their enemies, and as subdued transgressors will return to their God.

POLAR SEA ROUTE OPENED.

3,000,000 Tons of Wheat Held Up in Siberia.

Wireless telegraphy has opened a polar sea route from central Russia to Great Britain. Wireless stations established by the Russian Government in the Arctic keep the vessels advised as to the channels freest from ice. Acting on their information, two large vessels chartered by a Siberian trading company have just arrived at Grimsby, England, with cargoes from the Yenesei and Obi districts of central Siberia valued at $1,750,000.

The Obi and Yenesei are huge rivers with a great depth of water taking steamers of any size. But it was not until lately that their navigation was put in practice.

Owing to the use of the Trans-Siberian Railway by the Russian Government for war supplies there are 3,000,000 tons of wheat held up in Siberia, besides enormous quantities of other produce. If this can be got out, it will improve Russian exchange which is now a serious problem among the Allies.

Next year the company proposes to take about 70 steamers over the new White Sea route, laden with Siberian products. Even if the war ends before this time, it is pointed out that the Siberian railway will be more or less tied up with back business and the returning of troops.

"MOTHER MACREE."

Restores a Soldier's Memory and Sight.

The word "mother," which saves lives and spares the horror of incidents in the melodrama, has actually restored reason to a soldier in France whose mind had been left a blank by shell shock.

A concert party had gone over from England to cheer up the sick and one of their number, a well-known tenor, sang the old favorite, "Mother Machree." Among the audience was a nerve-shattered soldier who came out of a bombardment not only blind but almost an idiot. He could understand nothing, babbled meaninglessly, and had to be treated like an infant. He was still blind when taken to the concert. The word "mother" recurred in the song, and the soldier caught at it. When the song was finished he was still muttering the word to himself. But it proved the key to his memory. It began to recall detached incidents about himself, and later recovered both his mind and his sight.

Singers visiting the hospitals say that the wounded like jolly songs, either absurd or of the old-fashioned rollicking kind. They have a particular dislike for the purely patriotic song that has no humor in it.

GERMAN KINGS ARE ONLY PUPPETS

BAVARIAN DIPLOMAT WRITES REMARKABLE BOOK.

Emperor William Is Supreme and the Empress Is a Fire-Eater.

Baron Beyens, Belgian Minister at Berlin from the end of the Agadir crisis in 1911 until the outbreak of the great war, has written a remarkable book. "Germany Before the War" is, we suppose, thus far the only comprehensive and considered picture that exists of the Germany which, after the failure of the great Morocco adventure, set out on the road which ended in the European conflagration. Perhaps the most interesting features of the book are the brilliant sketches of German personalities—from the Emperor and Empress to the bureaucrats of the Wilhelmstrasse and the wirepullers of industry and finance. Most of them are drawn in Berlin, but the other courts are not forgotten, as may be judged from the following charming passage:

The new King of Bavaria, who hides a fine and acute intelligence under a battered exterior; the King of Saxony, with the loud voice, the noisy laugh and the soldierly figure; the King of Wurtemberg, most correct of gentlemen; the amiable Grand Duke of Baden, and the other minor gods of the modern Germanic Walhalla are the very humble servants of the Kaiser. It is vain for them to exchange with him, with a tone of equality, telegrams in which the affectionate use of the second person singular is a matter of etiquette. It is in vain for them to swell and puff themselves within the boundaries of their respective States, to address abundant speeches to their subjects, and to lend their presence on public occasions. For German policy they are nothing but the instruments of the wishes of the master who lives at Berlin.

In the case of some, the war disturbed old and comfortable habits. No more travels abroad as long as the war should last. No more stays in watering places, nor even hunting trips. The war exposed almost all of them to cruel sorrows. All of them, however, with the help of discipline or an outburst of sincere patriotism, though it necessarily to greet the war with enthusiasm. The King of Bavaria and the King of Saxony delivered speeches just as bellicose as those of the Emperor. All the monarchs hastened to howl with the wolves.

The Kaiser and England.

Of the Emperor himself Baron Beyens gives an account not greatly different from those of other well-informed observers. He describes as follows the Emperor's final, but unfortunate, approaches to Great Britain:

He had reckoned too high the savoir faire of his new ambassador, Prince Lichnowsky—popular in high London society—and the influence of the friends whom Germany possessed inside the Asquith Cabinet—the Haldanes, the Burnaes, and the Harcourts. The language of the Germanophil organs of the English press ab helped to deceive him about the true sentiments of the English people towards England's chief naval and commercial rival.

Less familiar is the account of the German Empress:

As mistress of her household she has much to do. It is her business to still the little storms which arise in court, to reconcile the Crown Prince with his father after every new escapade of this turbulent heir, or to induce the Emperor to consent to the morganatic marriage of another of their sons, desperately in love with a mere maid of honor. The preparation of Christmas trees in the Muschelsaal of the rococo palace at Potsdam is her great pleasure at the end of the year. To make family life in the royal domains as gemutlich as it is capable of being made in the home of a small Prussian farmer is her principal care.

But, according to Baron Beyens, it would be a mistake to regard "this mother of a family and this personification of Protestantism on the Imperial throne" as a pacifist. He relates that during the Agadir crisis the Empress, who disliked Herr von Kiderlen Waechter, said to him reproachfully, "Are we then always going to retreat before the French and to put up with their impudence?"

Crown Prince and Chancellor.

The most interesting feature of Baron Beyen's remarks about the Crown Prince is, perhaps, that he by no means exaggerates his importance, and explains that it is an absurd mistake to suppose that the Kaiser, "who has far too high a sense of his own importance," is jealous of him.

Baron Beyens draws with a firm hand the portraits of Herr von Bethmann Hollweg and his assistants. Of the Chancellor's attitude at the outbreak of war he says:

His personal inclinations leaned towards a peaceful solution, but this weak man let his hand be forced by the war party, and bowed, according to his custom, before the will of the Emperor, all the more because he was a mere instrument, no doubt unaware of the real designs concealed at the bottom of the Imperial mind. When he saw where this breakneck policy was going to carry Germany, he did not resist or protest, but turned all his spite against England, who had destroyed all the illusions on which people fed in Berlin by not remaining indifferent and impressive in face of the violation of Belgian neutrality. The philosopher of Hohen-Finow turned into an angry Teuton. All the Prussian brutality in his veins, mixed with his Frankfurt blood, came suddenly to the surface and the professional calm of the statesman accustomed to control his nerves gave way to a dramatic burst of rage.

MANKIND AGAINST INSECTS.

The Human Race May Be Exterminated By Insect Hosts.

Professor C. A. Ealand, the well-known British insect authority, advances the statement that the crucial struggle of humanity will not be that of nations warring for territory which each envies the other, but will be a colossal battle to keep from being driven off the earth itself! And in this battle it will be mankind against insects!

By its fecundity, its enormous comparative strength—sometimes equivalent of what would be, if the insect were as large as a horse, 1,000 horse-power—and in its inextinguishable passionate and concentrated will to live and its enormous adaptability, the insect kingdom makes the human race appear incredibly inefficient.

It is recognized that only by a tireless, long and costly and dangerous struggle will man be able to retain his dominance and freedom to develop his world.

Professor Ealand begins his remarkable work, which he calls "Insects and Man," with the following statement: "It is fortunate for man that the insect world is a house divided against itself. Except for this check the human race would be extinct in five or six years."

The fecundity of many insects is enormous. Huxley estimated that, mishaps apart, a single green fly would in ten generations produce a mass of organic matter equivalent to 500,000,000 human beings, or as many as the whole population of the Chinese Empire! A vast swarm of locusts 2,000 miles in extent crossed the Red Sea in 1865, and eight years previously 1,300 tons of locust eggs were destroyed in Cyprus alone.

But that is not all. The United States suffers damage annually to the extent of $40,000,000 owing to the depredations of the Hessian fly; the cotton boll weevil causes an annual loss of $30,000,000, and the coddling moth $15,000,000. Add to this the damage done by gypsy and brown-tail moths and the San Jose scale, to say nothing of a host of minor pests, and the total assumes alarming proportions.

They (insects) annually consume an amount of produce that sets calculation at defiance; and, indeed, if an approximation could be made to the quantity thus destroyed the world would remain skeptical of the results obtained, considering it too marvelous to be received as truth.

It is quite a common occurrence for a South African locust swarm to have a frontage of fifteen to twenty miles and a length of sixty to seventy miles! The sky is blackened and the sun almost blotted out. As the swarm passes they devour practically every living leaf. The veldt is stripped of grass and every winter crop cut down; trees are broken by the sleeping locusts, and even washing hung out to dry has been devoured. Trains are stopped and horses, as a rule, refuse to face a swarm. In one winter alone the locust damage in South Africa was estimated at $5,000,000.

Device to Save Wasted Time.

A new device brought out by an Englishman, puts an end to waste of time in using the telephone. The invention is called an amplifier, and can be connected with the receiver by pressing a button. By this simple arrangement one does not have to wait at the telephone while the person at the other end goes in search of the person you seek. Instead, the amplifier is switched on. The receiver can then be placed on the desk and work of the caller resumed. When the party sought calls his tone is greatly increased by the amplifier and can be heard across a large-sized room.

Objects to Methods of Raising Patriotic Funds

Editor Advocate:

Dear Sir—In these days of war we are pleased to see from week to week as we look into our papers the accounts of all sorts of sorts of schemes to raise funds at patriotic and Red Cross purposes.

Have the citizens of this fair Canada of ours one patriotic crazy, or what is the public? Have we lost sight of our position in this great and terrible struggle? Do we fail to see where we stand in the relationship existing between Great Britain and her colonies? Have we forgotten that we are a part of our great Empire? Do we not consciously that this struggle is their struggle? Our soldiers at the front, and we who stand behind, are we not fighting for the right, for God, for home, for the land?

What is patriotism? What is loyalty? Is it to be measured by the almighty dollar that we give to the various funds? As we read some of the articles published we would think this was the measure.

What is patriotism? Is it to make a shell strike them. The great derrick that hoists the steamboats in and out of the ship is secured in place as low down as possible, so as to be well out of the way of passing missiles. Spars and booms and planks of wood are either passed down into the stokeholds, placed behind armor out of the way, or else thrown clean overboard.

"Way for the Guns!"

The anchors are secured more tightly into the hawse-pipes; the cables have extra slips put upon them so that, in the event of one slip being shot away, there will still be sufficient restraint upon the cable to prevent it running out and bringing the ship to anchor, perhaps at a most critical moment. The great capstan is unshipped from forward, and placed inside the fore-screen of the ship; the loose gear on the forecastle is all secured tightly into place on the foremost bulkhead, and the rails which prevent men falling over the side on ordinary occasions are lowered flat.

Then the great guns in the foremost turret sweep slowly round until they point as far aft as they will bear, so that it can be ascertained that there is nothing to get in the way of their fire on any bearing. The shrouds of the foretopmast are slipped forward, and special stays set up to hold the mast. The great wire ropes used as swifters for the rigging are slipped, and special fighting stays shackled on to the necklace of the mast. These are in the nature of preventers, in case the ordinary shrouds get shot away.

Ready For Fire.

On the bridge the screens and glass are shifted, as stated above; then the conning-tower and lower steering-gear are connected up, in anticipation of the main wheel on the bridge being damaged. The screens round the conning-tower and the control-tops are rolled up so as not to hinder sight, while the range-finder and the various control instruments in these places are prepared for immediate use.

Every hatch on forecastle and quarter deck is shut down tight so that splinters of shell shall not penetrate to mess-deck or cabin, and so endanger the ship through fire. Leather hoses coil their great snaky lengths hither and thither across the decks, with brass nozzles ready for handling. They are not turned on, but flown below the great salt-water mains are already pulsating as they wait to do their duty if required.

The signalmen shift their flag lockers from their exposed position on the bridge to the comparatively sheltered one of the fore part of the upper deck; a place of danger truly, but the only place from which signals can be quickly seen and as quickly answered. The wireless operators close up their short-distance apparatus behind the armor of the after-turret's skirne chamber.

The carpenters, assisted by cooks, waiters, and stewards, make their way round the ship below decks, shutting down every iron deadlight in the port and rendering mess-decks veritable death traps with their darkness. Every door is closed and quickly clutched for water-tightness; every clutch is screwed down into its seating as tautly as possible.

Sick-berth stewards flit from turret to turret with First Aid bags, in the use of which at least three members of each turret's crew are skilled. Bandsmen get down the stretchers from the racks overhead, and repair to their appointed stations for action.

Down in the bowels of the ship the engineers on watch close down all watertight doors and hatches, shutting themselves—save for telephone and distance signals—completely off from the world above as far as communications and chances of escape in battle are concerned.

And then, even as the last piece of this gear are being stowed away, the bosun's mate pipes once more: "Prepare ship for battle!"

Protected by Cables.

The cables—all except just a few shackles for immediate use—are brought up from the great cable lockers below, and festooned around the inside of the ship's side at the places where the armor protection is thinnest. Great wire hawsers are snaked and coiled together into a most effective entanglement, and secured to transverse bulkheads so that they shall form a protective shield to the thin plating.

Bags, racks, and hammock-nettings are taken to pieces, and sent below into some dim recess in the ship's underworld; mess-tables and stools disappear, and the sailors have to take their meals squatting on the bare deck. Rope hawsers are snaked in and out of the wire shrouds of the masts to prevent the wire-rope flying when cut through by shells; every piece of timber and wood is sent down to the coal bunkers to be used for fuel if needs be; and, greatest job of all, the topmasts and yards are sent down to the upper deck from aloft and securely housed there.

It is a terrific job, this striking of masts and yards. Sailors swing out perilously on what appear to be mere ropeties of rope, and unshackle stays and lifts as fast as possible, securing lowering lines—three-inch wire hawsers—in their places, and then coming down through a hundred feet of space perched precariously astride the kicking, jumping yard, or topmast.

Screening in the Fuses.

Signalmen, too, swarm aloft and reeve fresh flag halliards to replace those displaced from their ordinary resting-places on the yards, and to rig a new long-distance masthead flashing-lamp on the stump of the lower foremast.

Magazines and shell-rooms are opened, and the racks in the turrets and casemates filled with shell. Gunners' mates are at the height of their busy season, as they screw fuse after fuse into the great lyddite shells—which are mostly kept unfused in the ship, and only fully prepared when an action is imminent.

And then, as the preparations for action are completed, all down the line a single pendant floats out from ship after ship, denoting that each is cleared for action and prepared for battle.

FRENCH MORE RESERVED.

Writer Thinks War Emphasized Their Logic and Keenness.

English people who have lived for years in Paris will tell you that since the war began the French have developed a new temperament. By this they mean that they have become reserved, almost silent, while before they were ebullient and eloquent in their own delightful language. One wonders just how far the English resident in Paris is right when he says this, says a writer in "T. P.'s Weekly." The French people are the keenest thinkers, the most logical folk in the whole world. They have sentiment, but they have never had much of the other thing, sentimentality. They have a habit of going directly to the point, of seeing what is before them, of exactly measuring the effort they need to make, and then of going through with it in a business-like fashion.

When the Germans descended on Northern France it is possible that the nation was, for a moment, struck, as we might say, "all of a heap." The thing was unexpected and colossal, and the shock was great, but the French quickly pulled themselves together; Paris quickly recovered, and then the true French nature showed itself. The French people found themselves with a tremendous affair on hand, they began to think quickly how they were to do it, and they set about doing it. They said, "Let us cease all else and devote our whole might to throwing back those Huns from Germany."

Paris is France much more than London is England, and so, when you are there, you feel yourself in the wider radius of the nation. You know what Paris is saying and doing. France is saying and doing, because in France all roads lead to and from Paris. A summer visit to Paris is, therefore, extremely educative, for one learns, as much by atmosphere and instinct as by hearing things said, just how France is thinking and acting in this time of cruel ordeal. Her thoughts spring quickly into her expression, and you can read them with especial ease in the comely face of Paris, although, indeed, the tidings which the French papers are able to give of the war, thanks to the energy of the censor, are not very full. If information often goes unpublished for military reasons the effect of it nevertheless circulates about, as news does, they say, in a desert.

Their Respective Regiments.

Pat and Sandy were discussing the merits of their respective regiments, and each one was of the opinion that their own was the best. "Why," said Pat, "when our colonel is dismissing us he says to the officers, 'Full out, gentlemen!'" "That don't count for much," said Sandy. "If our colonel said that all the regiment would fall out!"

WINDSOR'S WOMAN CITY CLERK

Miss Martha A. Dickenson Fills Position in Ontario City.

Windsor, Ontario, has the distinction of having the only woman city clerk in Canada. Some go even further than that and say she is the only one in the world, with the sole exception of a town in Poland.

This unique example of feminine endeavor is Martha A. Dickinson. She is young in years compared to the incumbents of similar positions elsewhere in Canada, for example, in Montreal, where a member of the Canadian Senate holds the city clerkship.

Miss Dickinson was engaged in newspaper work when she became assistant city clerk in 1902. For 12 years she attended to the details of the office and gained the confidence of City Clerk Lusted so well that in 1914, owing to increasing deafness, he asked that she be promoted to the responsibility of acting city clerk, and she was unanimously chosen by the Council for the office. That Miss Dickinson takes her work seriously—that is, she recognizes that her position is something more than keeping books—is evidenced in the fact that she was elected by her Council to represent Windsor at the recent meeting of the Ontario Municipal Association.

Recently the Mayor of Windsor wrote of her as follows: "During her term of service Miss Dickinson has secured a thorough grasp of municipal affairs, and has developed remarkable ability in handling the work of the office. For a number of years she has been assuming more and more of the work, and last spring, when she was compelled to assume the full management on account of the long illness of the city clerk, she did it in such a manner that there was not a hitch."

His Choice.

"I was counsel for the girl in a case once," said the barrister, "and I thought we had a good case. One of the strongest points was the ardent wooing of the defendant. We stipulated at least 1,244 kisses he had planted upon the fair one's ruby lips. Imagine our surprise when the defendant admitted it. 'That's true,' said he, testifying. 'I had to do it,' he explained. 'Had to do it?' I roared, hoping to embarrass him. 'Yes,' he answered, 'I either had to keep kissing her constantly or permit her to sing, and—well, I preferred the kissing.'"

Local Option Stays in Owen Sound

The opponents of Local Option in Owen Sound made another attempt to bring on a vote for repeal but failed. The petition they presented to the council was not signed by a sufficient number of names.

In Training for Signal Service

Wilfred McGill, who has been attending Galt Collegiate Institute, last week enlisted for overseas service, and came up from Galt to make a short visit to his father and friends here before reporting for duty. On Saturday morning he left for Ottawa, where he takes up the course of training for the divisional signal service. Wilfred is a stalwart young fellow, a clever student, and an adept in any line of sport he takes up. From such material the very best class of soldiers and men in the fighting field are made.

Operation for Appendicitis

Mr. Melvin McArthur, son of Mr. and Mrs. D. McArthur, has passed through an attack of appendicitis which necessitated an operation from which he is now recovering very satisfactorily. He has been employed with the Bell Telephone Co., with headquarters at Guelph. On Saturday he intended going to Toronto to enlist with the soldiers, but instead of stepping up to the recruiting station he was carried to the Guelph General Hospital. He was taken ill very suddenly and on Saturday the operation was performed. His father went down Saturday, returning Monday evening.

Death of William H. Bain

When, last summer, William H. Bain arrived home from Detroit, it was evident to his friends that he was in decline. Shortly after he went to the sanitarium at Gravenhurst, but the best that is known in skill and treatment could not arrest the progress of the disease. His death occurred on Wednesday last, and the remains were brought home for burial. The funeral took place from the station on Friday after the arrival of the noon train, Rev. Mr. Little conducting the service. Interment was made in the family plot in Paisley cemetery. The deceased was the eldest son of the late D J Bain and Mrs E Bain, of Paisley. "Billy," as he was known by his boyhood acquaintances here, was a popular boy among his school-fellows and companions. He left home shortly after quitting school, and went to Niagara Falls, N.Y., where he was employed for a number of years with a large manufacturing concern. Latterly he had been in Detroit. He was 28 years of age. The sorrowing mother and members of the family have the sincere sympathy of all in their bereavement. The sisters are Mrs Alice Sinclair, Paisley, Mabel, in Vancouver, and Effie, who is now home from Gravenhurst. The only brother is Andrew J., who is training with the 95th Batt. in Toronto, and was home for the funeral.

Bruce in with the "Ontario Dry" Campaign

The executive of Bruce temperance workers met at Palmerston on Thursday, and decided, before submitting the Canada Temperance Act, as contemplated, to await developments of the provincial campaign now under way by the Hundred Citizens' League, a non-political organization formed recently in Toronto to urge total prohibition in Ontario before July next.

To Develop Zinc Mines in Bruce Peninsula

The Sandoval Smelting Company, an American concern, is endeavoring to obtain important interests in zinc properties held by Londoners along Lake Huron. The company has offered to build a smelter and push development. After testing samples the company declares it is the highest grade of zinc yet found in America. These are the deposits that have been found on the Bruce Peninsula, and may be the realization of what has been contended that the rocks of that section contained valuable ore, which some day will bring wealth to that section of the province.

School Board

The regular meeting of School Board was held on Monday evening. Members present—Dr. Hopson (chairman), Rev. L. W. Diehl, J. B. McBride, D. McKenzie. The salaries for November were ordered to be paid, also following accounts: Sinclair Bros., $6 08; D. McArthur, $24 30; I. Shoemaker, 55c; Toronto School Supply Co., $9 80; A. Fisher & Son, $17 35; P. B. Moore, $12 95; J. Trelfind, $2 60; A. Jack, $1 80; Geo. M. Hendry Co., $26 59; Ballachey, Laidlaw & Co., 50c; H. Young, refund fees, $1. The salaries for December were authorized to be paid at close of term. The report of Public School Inspector Field was received and read. The principal's report of attendance for November shows the enrollment of 102 public school pupils and 55 in continuation classes—total 209.

Eldersile Politically Quiet

Not a gun has been fired from any quarter that would denote any campaign activity in Eldersile, and it is quite probable that the municipal nomination proceedings will come and go without any hidden batteries discharging shrapnel, or airships dropping bombs on the heads of the quietette of citizens who have been acting as township officers. There may be some oratorical gas emitted by a few of the speakers who take the platform, but it won't be fatal to any aspirations that General J E Case and his lieutenants may be cherishing for another year's peaceful tenure of office. In fact it is expected that the whole council will be re-elected by acclamation. If there is any opposition working it must be by submarine methods, and the operators haven't yet developed assurance enough to poke their periscope above the surface of the unruffled waters of this little municipal sea. To be sure, there may even be enough explosives stowed away in some corner of the township to cause a great upheaval.

WILL WE EVER WALK ON AIR?

Train Of Thought Inspired By a Letter About "Fruit-a-tives"

MR. D. McLEAN

Orillia, Ont., Nov. 28th, 1914.

"For over two years, I was troubled with Constipation, Drowsiness, Lack of Appetite and Headaches. I tried several medicines, but got no results and my Headaches became more severe. One day I saw your sign which read 'Fruit-a-tives' make you feel like walking on air. This appealed to me, so I decided to try a box. In a very short time, I began to feel better, and now I feel fine. Now I have a good appetite, relish everything I eat, and the Headaches are gone entirely. I cannot say too much for 'Fruit-a-tives', and recommend this pleasant fruit medicine to all my friends". DAN McLEAN.

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" is daily proving its priceless value in relieving cases of Stomach, Liver and Kidney Trouble—General Weakness, and Skin Diseases.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. At all dealers or sent postpaid by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Women's Institute

The Women's Institute were pleasingly entertained on Dec. 2nd at the home of Mrs. Briggs, the vice-president. The usual business was augmented in arranging for the Saturday teas for Red Cross fund. This done, Mrs. Ballachey read a well prepared paper on Christmas. So well received was this essay it was suggested to have it sent in to the superintendent of institutes for the year book. Mrs W T. Hopper's report of convention was also greatly enjoyed.

Greenock Municipal Politics

Reeve Dennis Phelan, whose popularity and vote-getting strength so far has been unbreakable in the municipal arena, is again in the field for re-election. The only opponent who has cropped up so far is Mr. Sam Hawthorne, who served as councillor for several years and was also deputy-reeve for a term, but of late years has not been figuring in township affairs at all. Mr Hawthorn was up in the north part of the township on Friday collating recruits to fight against the evil wars have and laying mines that are calculated to blow Denny out of the (reeve)ship. Councillor Law would have been a candidate for the higher honors at the coming election, but being commanding officer of the 32nd Bruce Batt., he is now so tied up with military business that he cannot continue to devote attention to municipal matters, so will retire at the end of 1915. Councillor Collins is also retiring, while Councillors Campbell and McKinnon will be up for re election. Mr. Richard Acton is reported as likely to make another run for councillor, and Dr. R. J. Nelson, the well-known vet, is spoken of as a desirable new candidate who may be induced to accept nomination. Possibly other men in the south part of the township may come forward by nomination day.

I.O.O.F. Presentation

Rev. E. J. McEwen, who has been pastor of Paisley Baptist church for five years, has received and accepted a call to become pastor of the Wiarton congregation. He will preach his farewell sermons here on Sunday next. Mr. McEwen became popular as a preacher, and as an all-round citizen was a good mixer with the people, so his departure is regretted by many more than his denominational followers. As a member of Abiram Lodge he took an interested and active part in the affairs of that order. At the regular meeting on Tuesday night the reverend gentleman was presented with an address and parting memento in the form of a gold ring set with I.O.O.F. links and a Morris chair. The following address accompanied:

To Rev E J McEwen:

Dear Sir and Bro—It having become known to the brothers that you are about to take your departure from among us, we, the members of Abiram Lodge, No 265, wish to take this opportunity to express to a small measure our esteem and love towards one who was ever ready to take a man's place as an Oddfellow and as a citizen of our town. We hope for you a useful and prosperous future. While we regret to lose one of our esteemed members we know that our loss will be Wiarton's gain. We wish to present to you as a small token of our esteem this chair and ring, and we hope they will ever remind you of the good old Lodge where you spent so many pleasant hours. Signed on behalf of the committee. R. H. GRANT, ALEX FRASER.

About 65 members of the lodge were present, and numerous short speeches were made, all complimentary to the departing brother, and expressive of good wishes for the future.

Objects to Methods of Raising Patriotic Funds

Editor Advocate:

Dear Sir—In these days of war we are grieved to see from week to week as we look into our papers the accounts of all sorts of sorts of schemes to raise funds for patriotic and Red Cross purposes.

Have the citizens of this fair Canada of ours gone patriotic crazy, or what is the trouble? Have we lost sight of our position in this great and terrible struggle? Do we fail to see where we stand in the relationship existing between Great Britain and her colonies? Have we forgotten that we are a part of our great Empire? Are we not conscious that this struggle is our struggle? Our soldiers at the front, and we who stay behind, are not only fighting for the right, for God, for home, for native land?

What is patriotism? what is loyalty? Is it to be measured by the almighty dollar that we give to the various funds? As we read some of the articles published one would think this was the measure.

What is patriotism? Is it making or holding card parties, dances and such like, that we may raise funds for the Red Cross or patriotic purposes? One would think so as we look into the press: Mrs. S. and so gave a select-five-hundred party, where a nice sum was realized for the patriotic fund. The ladies of G— held a dance for the Red Cross, which was a grand success, a handsome sum being realized. 4 d

Is this Canada? Is this a Christian land? A land where God is believed in and worshipped. Is this patriotism? Euchre and dancing are unseasonable amusements, even in time of peace. How about such times as these? With our fathers, husbands, brothers and sons standing in the trenches of those far stretching and terrible battle lines, have we any question as to the propriety of these amusements?

What is the Red Cross? Is it work not the caring for our sick, wounded and dying soldiers? Yes, and further, our brave, noble and heroic girls—nurses, if you wish—are giving themselves, body and soul, for our boys who are on the firing line, to suffer for, or who are at hand.

What are we doing? Playing euchre and dancing to raise funds to help our Red Cross? Shame on the people of our fair Dominion whose patriotism and loyalty reaches no further than this. Think of it, every time you shuffle the cards, every time you turn in the dance, out there in those war stricken lands better men than we are are dying in our stead, and we are and are safe through their sacrifice. It hurts to think of these things, but have we no right to suffer? Let us have deeper and more far-reaching thoughts of our brothers and sisters at the front. Patriotism. What is it? Look at that old mother as she knits her socks—one pair, two, ten, twenty, what for?—the boys at the front. Look at her again as she recalls go. Each round a prayer goes up to her God, asking that the boys may find rest and protection under the shadow of His almighty wings. Contrast our ladies tripping the light fantastic, or cutting the pack. What for? To raise funds for the Red Cross to help care for our sick and wounded, and to point our dying ones to the Cross outside a city's walls. Does a prayer go up with each throw of a card or each round of the dance?

Patriotism and Red Cross—noble work. Let us support them as best we can, but let us not lose sight of the fact that the men are suffering for us and for the things that they and we hold dear.

CONSTANTINE OF GREECE DEFIES THE ALLIES

Repels Demands Made—Says Greece Will Protest to the World—Will Remain Neutral to the End

Constantine I., King of the Greeks, received the correspondent of the Associated Press at Athens and has given him a message for America on the attitude which Greece has assumed in the world war and the reasons for the policy which has been followed by the Greek Government. After declaring that the Anglo-French forces were inadequate and that participation in the war by Greece would only result in Greek territory being laid waste by the enemy, King Constantine said: "If the Entente will assure me that when they are driven back into Greek territory they will reconsider the Balkan game ended, reembark, and leave Greece, I will guarantee with my whole army to protect their retreat against the Germans, Bulgarians, or anybody else and give them time to embark without being endangered. Then I would be legitimately protecting my frontiers, and it would not involve Greece in further risks. More cannot do.

Demand Too Great

"The Entente's demand is too much. They try to drive Greece out of neutrality; they come into Greek territory and waters as though they were theirs. At Naulia they destroyed tanks of petroleum intended to kill locusts on the excuse that they might be used by German submarines. They stop Greek ships; they ruin Greek commerce; they want to seize our railways, and now they demand that we take away the troops guarding the Greek frontiers, leaving my country open to invasion or any lawless incursion. I will not do it. I am willing to discuss reasonably any fair proposals, but two things I will not concede. Greece shall not be forced or cajoled out of her neutrality; Greece will maintain her sovereignty and her sovereign rights to protect herself in need."

"And if that is not necessary—if coercive measures are used by the Entente powers?" the King was asked.

"I will protest to the World

"We shall protest to the whole world that our sovereign rights are violated. We shall resist passively, as long as we humanly can, being forced by any measures whatsoever into a course which we know will be prejudicial to the liberties and happiness of our people."

"And when you cannot hold out longer?"

"We shall have to demobilize our armies and await the march of events. What else can we do?"

KAISER WHINES FOR CESSATION OF WAR

Peace Rumors Becoming More and More Certain Daily—Week's Fighting Shows Little Change

The momentous decision reached by the German Government to permit the discussion of peace in the Reichstag is regarded in London as the clearest indication that Germany is prepared to lay down her arms if acceptable conditions can be obtained. The entire world is awaiting eagerly the speech of the Imperial Chancellor. Meanwhile the wildest rumors are current. The latest of these, coming from The Hague and obviously from a German source, is to the effect that the Kaiser intends to proclaim peace shortly. It is asserted on the "highest authority" that the Kaiser will send a letter to President Wilson, urging him to accept the role of mediator.

Bulgarians Wearying

It is officially announced that only German, Austrian and Bulgarian officers have entered Monastir, no troops accompanying them, says a Reuter despatch from Athens. It is also says: "It is reported from Florina that the Bulgarian troops remain camped in the vicinity of Monastir at a place named St. Kiriaki. A delegation of the inhabitants went out to the Bulgarian outposts to notify the troops that they could enter the town. Bulgarian deserters arriving at Florina say that the great majority of the Bulgarian soldiers think that the war has been ended by the occupation of Macedonia, and do not want to continue fighting in the interests of the Germanic powers."

German Offensive Shattered

On the Russian front an attempted German offensive in the region of Dvinsk, near Schischkuo farm, northwest of Lake Sventen, broke down under rifle fire. Earlier reports state that the repulse on the left bank of the Styr northwest of Ashelva was regained later. Serious losses were inflicted on the enemy above Czartorysk, causing them to flee in disorder.

Italians Make Many Prisoners

The following statement concerning the progress of hostilities was given out by the Italian War Office: "There were encounters between detachments in the Tonale zone, and we repulsed enemy troops near Saybar, Tolmino, Hospite, and in the Ledro valley, where the enemy delivered an attack on our positions north of Pre, which we recently captured. On Thursday night after concentrated artillery preparations with guns of all calibres dense masses of infantry, advancing like waves, charged our trenches in the Mrzli redoubt on Monte Nevoso. Notwithstanding the destructive effect of our accurate and rapid fire, parties of the enemy penetrated our lines in a few places, from which they were driven out after violent hand-to-hand fighting. After a desperate fight the enemy was compelled to flee, leaving, in addition to five hundred dead on the field, 131 prisoners, including three officers.

Buerz Gets Sentenced

Karl Buerz, aged 72, head of the Hamburg-American Line, was sentenced to serve a year and a half in the penitentiary for conspiring to defraud the United States Government by obtaining clearances falsely sworn to.

MORE GERMAN ATTACHES FLUNG OUT BY STATES

Von Papen and Boy-Ed Are Expelled From Washington Owing to Plotting Against Government

Further complications in the relations of the United States and Germany have developed when Secretary of State Lansing announced: "Because of what this Government considers improper activities in military and naval matters, it has requested the immediate recall of Captain Boy-Ed and Captain von Papen, Naval and Military Attache, respectively, to the German Embassy here, as they are no longer acceptable to this Government." The formal statement marked the conclusion of an exhaustive investigation of the activities of German representatives in this country, conducted by the State Department and the Department of Justice. The Secretary of State made it clear that the recall of the German Military and Naval Attaches was not due to the verdict in the New York Federal Court against representatives of the Hamburg-American Line, found guilty of conspiracy in connection with the supplying of German warships at sea. He said Ambassador von Bernstorff was apprised of the Government's decision. He added that he refrained from announcing the fact so that Ambassador von Bernstorff's report would reach Berlin before press accounts. The demand for the recall of the two attaches is the culmination of a long series of charges and counter-charges, plots and counter-plots involving American neutrality violations which have been thrashed out by the Federal Government.

Austrian Next to Go

Alexander von Nuber, Austrian Consul-General in New York, has been involved in the investigation proceedings. No announcement has been made concerning him, but in the case of a Consul no formal communication with his Government would be necessary. The State Department could arbitrarily and without notice cancel his credentials, leaving him without official standing. The agents of the Department of Justice, at the instance of the State Department, for months past have kept close watch on foreign military and naval officers in the United States.

LOAN IS DOUBLED

Canada Subscribed Over a Hundred Million Dollars to Assist Britain

The Government has decided to make the Canadian war loan one hundred instead of fifty millions. The extra fifty millions will be obtained from the sixty odd millions of the over-subscription to the original loan, and will be used as a credit for the Imperial Treasury to pay for shells, munitions and other war supplies ordered by the Imperial Government. It is the first step towards doing Canada's fair part in helping the motherland to finance the enormous war expenditure of $25,000,000 per day, which the Imperial Treasury has hitherto borne unaided. It means that the Government, as forecasted, has definitely embarked on the policy of helping the motherland not only with men and munitions, but also with money, and of returning, in part at least, the assistance which the Dominion has received from Britain in the way of war loans and through half a billion dollars' worth of war orders.

Conscription Talk Still Brewing

The recruiting scheme of the Earl of Derby, director of recruiting, has not been as successful as had been hoped for, says James Henry Thomas Labor member of Parliament. Mr. Thomas said he discussed the matter with the Earl of Derby and that the Earl had expressed the opinion that his plan had not been as successful as he had anticipated. Therefore, the Earl feared that the supreme effort must be made in the next few days by those who valued their freedom and were opposed to conscription.

Bulgaria Sees She's Been Duped

Travelers from Sofia to Saloniki bring the news that while the Bulgarians are pleased with their success in occupying Macedonia there is an undercurrent of uneasiness among the more intelligent classes, who feel that Bulgaria has been made a catspaw by Germany. Rigid martial law prevails through the whole country. Relatives are not allowed to see the wounded or to receive news from them."

Russia's Monthly Haul

The Russian legation at Berne issued the following statement: "In the month of October the German official communication greatly exaggerated the number of Russians made prisoner. October was an especially successful month for the Russians, who captured 674 German officers, 49,200 Austro-German soldiers, 21 large cannon, 1,116 machine guns and three searchlights."

South African Army For East Africa

Gen. Jan Christian Smuts, Minister of Defence in the Union of South Africa, announced that the entire force asked for for the East African expedition had been recruited and that the Imperial Government had been informed that the Union was increasing its forces to provide for contingencies.

Three-Cent Stamp Appears

The Post Office Department at Ottawa has decided to issue a stamp of the value of three cents, obviating the necessity of putting two stamps, regular war stamps, on a letter. In this way it will be easier to revert after the war to the regular two-cent postage.

Turkish Destroyer Lost

The Turkish torpedo boat destroyer Yar Hissar has been sunk in the Sea of Marmora by a British submarine. A supply steamer and four sailing vessels also were destroyed by the submarine on Dec. 3 and 4.

MODERN KING CANUTE GOES TO MAKE PEACE

Henry Ford of Automobile Fame With His "White Feather" Accomplices Sails to Oblige Kaiser

Amid scenes almost beyond belief, Henry Ford's Peace Ship, Oscar II, backed out from its pier in Hoboken on Saturday bearing a strangely assorted company that has proclaimed that it will stop the war. In all, a careful count of the passenger list shows that 142 sailed in the first and second cabins, which are reserved exclusively for the Ford party, and decorated with stuffed doves and olive branches. There were speeches galore on the dock and aboard the ship, where nothing less than pandemonium reigned. There was the band playing, "I Didn't Raise My Boy to be a Soldier," there was Mr. Bryan acting as witness to a hasty marriage whose altar lights were banging flash lights; there was a Swedish steward rushing about with a squirrel in a cage, and finally forcing it into Mr. Ford's stateroom; there were belated arrivals, including many college students, forcing their way past everyone and trampling aboard, their trunks upon their shoulders.

Gott Strafe Ford

As it was at the beginning of the Ford peace ship plan, so it was at the pier. Nobody knew where to go, nobody was in charge of anything, nobody knew anything except that here was a ship that Henry Ford was taking to Europe to stop the war, get the boys out of the trenches by Christmas, and lots of other things. An intoxicated young man with a German accent shouted "Gott strafe that rich Ford," women cried hysterically, "God bless Mr. Ford. God bless Mr. Bryan," the ban played "Onward Christian Soldiers," and changed to "The Star Spangled Banner," a man said to be a movie actor dived into the water after the receding ship and still the crowd cheered and laughed and waved flags. Despite the regulation governing passports, Henry Ford determined to cross German territory on his way from Copenhagen to The Hague, where the peace conference is to be staged. Mr. Ford's passport authorized him to visit only neutral countries, not to stop at or pass through any of the belligerents, and some of the passengers are apprehensive lest he and his party be arrested if they attempt to set foot on German soil.

Roumania Wakes Up

All Ships Commandeered Showing That Something is About to Happen

Roumanian military authorities have announced that all steamships, barges, tugs and other craft in Roumanian ports will be commandeered "in the interest of national defence." The Premier has declined to discuss international relations in the Parliament for the same reason. Diplomatists here profess to see in these developments an indication that the nation will abandon its policy of neutrality, but the British press, with the experience of Bulgaria and Greece to refer to, show little disposition to accept this view. They prefer to withhold comment until some actual and committing step has been taken. Exchanges of communication between Bucharest and Petrograd have been frequent during the last few days, obviously with the object on the part of Russia of reaching such an understanding with Roumania as the French and British obtained from M. Venizelos relative to the movement of troops through Greece.

Von Bissing Refuses Whitlock

American Consul Famous in Cavell Murder Not Wanted Back by Huns

The Amsterdam correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Company sends the following: "Advices from Hoensdaal (Holland) state that Belgian newspapers under the German censorship have been ordered to announce that Brand Whitlock (United States Minister to Belgium) will not return to Brussels. The news has been received with consternation throughout Belgium. It is believed that Gen. von Bissing (German Governor General of Belgium), desired to have Mr. Whitlock recalled and that he is also pressing for the immediate removal of the American and Spanish Legations from Brussels to Havre, where the Belgian Government is."

German Factory Blown Up

Destruction of a large ammunition factory at Halle, Prussian Saxony, by an explosion, with the loss of several hundred lives, is reported by Reuter's correspondent. Discontented workmen are suspected, the message says, of having caused the explosion. It is said a similar disaster was narrowly avoided at Bogden, Silesia. The ammunition factory there, it is reported, was saved by the discovery that it had been undermined. According to this account, arrests have been made at Bogden.

Serbia to Fight to the End

The Giornale d'Italia in Rome prints an interview with M. Ristitch, Serbian Minister to Italy, concerning a rumor that Serbia might capitulate. The Minister is quoted as follows: "I am absolutely sorry that there will be any capitulation in Serbia. There the people either win or die. The Serbian people are determined to fight to the bitter end. Serbia will be loyal to her last man. In short they Serbia will have a fresh army of 200,000 men, full of enthusiasm, to throw on the flank of the enemy."

British Still Air Raiding

The following official communication from Field Marshal French was made public: "On the second, an air raid was carried out against Don station and buildings in its vicinity. Ammunition store is believed to have been blown up and the railway was hit near the station. Some fires were observed in Don after the raid. All the machines returned safely, although several hostile machines were met and engaged. Mining activity continues on both sides.

As Mark rode on through the grounds he noticed further signs of approaching desolation. Fences were broken or down, and out-buildings were dilapidated or unroofed.

Everywhere all things betokened indifference and neglect, and prophesied of ruin. Mark Sutherland perceived the approach of an old negro, who touched his hat in respectful salutation, and followed him to the foot of the Rose Terrace, where he stood in readiness to take the horse. Mark dismounted, and threw the reins to the groom, whom he now recognized for an old acquaintance. He held out his hand and spoke kindly to the old man, inquiring after his wife and children.

With a deep sigh, Mark Sutherland turned from the poor old man, and went up the stone steps that led to the Rose Terrace. A man of very blonde, and slothful appearance, was lazily reclining upon a bench, with his feet on the top of the balustrades.

Mark Sutherland entered, advanced, and bowed very coldly, saying: "Mr. St. Gerald Ashley, if I remember right?"

The ruin of St. Gerald Ashley arose to his feet, with something of his former ease and self-possession.

"Yes, sir. Mr. Sutherland, you are welcome to Cashmere. Walk in; or would you prefer to sit down in the cool air here. Carl, go and let your mistress know that Mr. Sutherland has arrived."

Mr. Ashley then conducted his guest into the house.

The girl returned. Her mistress was too indisposed; Mr. Sutherland would please to excuse her.

Within half an hour a servant showed Mr. Sutherland to his room.

After refreshing himself, Mark requested to know if Mr. Clement Sutherland was in the house.

He was answered that Mr. Sutherland would not return before the next morning.

And soon after he was summoned to the supper-table. No one was present beside Mr. Ashley and Mark Sutherland, except Oriole, who stood at the head of the table and poured out the coffee.

Mr. Ashley ordered more wine, but Mark Sutherland suffered his glass to be filled once, and then excused himself; and Mr. Ashley filled and quaffed glass after glass, momentarily more and more garrulous.

Mr. Ashley poured out and quaffed glass after glass of wine, until his ranting mood was merging into a stupid one; and Mark Sutherland seized the first opportunity to rise and leave the table, and pass into the drawing-room.

How changed since he saw it last. Desolation was creeping even into the sanctuary of the house. He had scarcely time to note this by the sickly light of the moon when a loud, familiar voice in the hall arrested his attention:

"Where is he? In the drawing-room? And no light there? Get a candle directly, and light me in there! I shall break my shins over these empty baskets and upset stools—do you hear?"

And soon after entered a slovenly man-servant bringing a guttering tallow-candle, stuck in a mildewed silver candlestick. He was followed closely by Mr. Billy Bolling, who, with outstretched arms, and almost shouting his welcome, ran to Mark, and clasped him around the body, exclaiming, sobbingly:

"Mr. dear—dear—bo-oy! I'm so glad to see you! And how did you leave little Rose? And when did you get here? And nobody to welcome you, but that brandy-swilling beast in there! Begone, you black villain, you. That's a field nigger, Mark! Every decent house servant, man and maid, has fallen under the hammer long ago—all, except Oriole. Ah! Mark, times are changed since you were here!" said Mr. Bolling.

"You are not changed, uncle, except that you appear to be in even finer health than ever."

"Me! Why, I'm dying of mortification and grief! I am. I have got an organic disease of the heart."

"Why, Uncle Billy, I never saw a man in such perfect health. You are fatter and rosier than ever!"

"Fatter and rosier! Lord help your perspicacity. It's—it's dropsy, and —and—fever!"

"Reassure yourself, Uncle Billy, and tell me how it fares with all our friends."

"All going to the dogs—except them that are going to the demon!"

"Nay, Uncle Billy, I hope not. How are they all at Silentshades? How is my dear mother?"

"Didn't you know they had sold Silentshades long ago and moved to Texas?" exclaimed Uncle Billy.

"I knew nothing about it. What on earth could have tempted my mother to sell her home?"

"What could have tempted her?" repeated Uncle Billy, mockingly. "What could have tempted her to marry Dr. Wells, at her age?—a woman of forty, whose matrimonial feelings should all be quiet?"

"I suppose my mother was lonesome."

"Oh! lonesome be hanged! Wasn't I there—her natural born brother. You know what company I am."

"Yes," said Mark, suppressing a smile.

"Well, I was there to take care of her, and protect her, and cowhide her niggers; that last is very laborious. What tempted your mother to sell her home and leave all her friends, I'll just tell you—vanity."

"Vanity!"

"Yes, vanity—the wish to be thought generous, and disinterested, and confiding," sneered Uncle Billy.

Mark Sutherland reddened.

"My dearest mother was all that in reality, without wishing to be thought so."

"I tell you 'twas vanity—that tempted her to sell her home—vanity that tempted her to marry—vanity that tempted her first to listen to a suitor—a woman of her age! But I do think women are the most incorrigible—the most hopeless—and of all women, middle-aged widdows are the most desperate fools!"

"Uncle Billy, as an old bachelor, you have a license to rail at women in general. My mother was a handsome woman, in her prime, and it appears to me not unnatural that she should have married. But if you thought otherwise, you should have told her so."

"For what good? A cat may release a mouse from its claws; a rattlesnake a charmed bird from its jaws; the grave give up its victim; but never cat held mouse, or snake bird, or grave victim with such a death-grip as a middle-aged widow holds her last lover!"

"Just now you told me that Dr. Wells tempted my mother into this marriage—now you lay the responsibility upon her. That is like your old, impartial justice, Mr. 'Bothsides.'"

"All true. They tempted each other—she, him, with her handsome property! he, her with his handsome person! He was bent on having her plantation!—she, on having him. I'll tell you all about it, Mark! I kept a sharp look-out on that chap when he first came prowling about Silentshades. I was tempted to shoot him by mistake for a catamount. But I twigged him. Sure as ever they'd be on the piazza, I'd be in the parlor under the window, listening."

"But what did you think of yourself, Mr. Bolling, for your eavesdropping?"

"Thought I was doing my duty by my sister, to circumvent a spy de-ceiver! Oh, sure you don't know how old pill-box and blister-planter could court!"

"And how do you know it was not perfectly sincere?" exclaimed Mark, rising and walking away.

"What, at forty?" coolly inquired Uncle Billy.

Mr. Sutherland returned, and resumed his seat, and inquired:

"Has my mother's marriage turned out happy?"

"Don't know—can't say. I'm sure!" "You have not told me why she sold her home."

"Dr. Wells tempted her to do it for his sake. He was too cunning, to stop courting her after the honeymoon until he had got his hands on the property; on the contrary, they sat on the bench of the piazza against the parlor window blinds, and courted more than ever! By-and-by he began to take the tone of a wise, affectionate guide and husband, and he told her again what a high-principled, noble woman she was, and how she had only to get rid of one little weakness—and she would be a glorious woman—a perfect woman! And she pressed to know what it was. 'Oh,' he told her, 'it was a want of trustfulness—a want of that confiding spirit so beautiful in woman.' Well, Mark, to convince him that she could exercise a confiding spirit, and so become 'a glorious woman' all out, she gives him the full possession and perfect control of all her property, and the upshot of it all is that Dr. Wells has sold Silentshades, and they have emigrated to Texas."

"Was my mother willing to go?"

"I don't know, Mark. After parting with Silentshades, they remained here at Cashmere about three months and I thought in that three months your mother altered more than any one I had ever seen."

"Poor, dear mother!"

Wearied, and longing for solitude to reflect, Mark expressed a wish to retire. Mr. Bolling rang for the night lamps, and they parted for the night.

CHAPTER XXVI.

Early the next morning Mark descended to the drawing-room. The sliding doors and the flowing curtains that divided the boudoir from the saloon were drawn entirely back, revealing the whole apartments. Yes, here was the same saloon, the temple of joyous reunions, and the same boudoir. Yet how changed from all the pristine splendor of the past!

His melancholy thoughts were interrupted by the entrance of India. Prepared as he had been to meet a great change, he scarcely recognized her.

"I am happy to see you again at Cashmere, my dear cousin. Why could we not be friends?"

Mr. Sutherland cordially grasped her outstretched hands, and said:

"We are friends, my dearest India; at least, I can speak for myself and for one who loves you not less than I do—my wife, Rosalie."

Mark gazed earnestly at her, then turned away his eyes, waiting reverently for her self-recovery. Soon she looked up, and, faintly smiling, said:

"I have had much to try me of late, my cousin. Everything is going to ruin with us—everything."

"I trust not. Your father is embarrassed, but with the advice and assistance of his friends, all, I hope, will be brought to a happy issue."

"Ah, no! But it is not of our desperate affairs I wished to speak. Tell me of your own. You have been successful in life?"

"Yes, I have been successful, thanks, under Divine Providence, to the constant sympathy and co-operation of my faithful Rosalie."

"Rosalie is an amiable woman; how is she?"

"Well, and very busy."

"And your family?"

"We have no family; we are all the world to each other."

"Tell me how you have got on since I saw you."

Mr. Sutherland told her the principal circumstances of his life since their last parting, dwelling upon Rosalie's hope, faith, and persevering energy.

"All is sadly changed here; my father has been very unfortunate, and Mr. Ashley—I cannot comprehend it! I see ruin gathering darkly around us all, without the power, and without the will, to avert it, any more than I could avert an earthquake."

Mark Sutherland made no comment.

At the breakfast-table appeared India, Mark Sutherland, St. Gerald Ashley, and Mr. Bolling. Mr. Ashley's face was bloated, and his eyes blood-shot. He sat silent and morose, and ate but little. Mr. Sutherland was rejoiced when the gloomy meal was over, and wished the master of the house might soon return, and his business be concluded at once. He expressed this wish to Mr. Bolling.

"And so do I, nephew. Each night that fellow goes to bed tipsy. Yes, I wish that Clem. Sutherland would come, and we could finish our business and leave. I intend to stick to you. I admire your principles—always did."

The day advanced, and still Clement Sutherland did not make his appearance. The late dinner was served, and passed gloomily as the breakfast. The house was growing intolerable to Mark, who was informed that Clement Sutherland might be found at the Planters' Rest, where he usually stopped when business took him to the village. Mr. Sutherland then ordered his horse, and, while waiting for him, went and took leave of Mr. Bolling, leaving his compliments and adieus to Mrs. Ashley, who had retired to her room to take her afternoon meal. Then he mounted his horse, and took the road to the village, intending, if possible, to have an interview and a settlement with his uncle, and to make his headquarters at the village inn.

CANADA'S LIVE STOCK INDUSTRY.

In competing for the markets of the world there is no branch of industry that exceeds in importance that of live stock breeding and raising. Paraphrasing the old Jingo cry, we have the land, we have the will, and we have the climate. What is needed is the means, and ever more means, and simultaneously the ways of marketing. However divergent in views and theories people may be, it cannot be denied that they are all united in a common effort to improve both agricultural and industrial conditions. In helping the one the other is being aided. The interests are inextricably involved. If either is especially prosperous, both ultimately must be, although one may feel the benefits of extra demand and high prices before the other.

In the past few years especially, a deal of scientific effort has been devoted to the cultivation of the land and improvement of productions of the soil, and right has not been lost of the needs and necessities of that other branch of inestimable worth—live stock, meaning thereby horses, cattle, sheep and swine. In the latter direction pure-bred animals have recently been placed in various districts where their services were previously difficult to procure, the registration of pedigrees has been nationalized, systematized and subsidized, grants towards greatly liberalizing the premiums at exhibitions have been made, a special branch has been established in connection with the Experimental Farm system at Ottawa to investigate the cause of disease, to give counsel to breeders and to control outbreaks of infectious or contagious ailments, judges and lecturers have been appointed free of cost, cold storage facilities have been arranged and refrigerator cars equipped and paid for, grants have been made under the tremendously beneficial Agricultural Instruction Act, with its ten million dollar attachment, for the encouragement of veterinary education and research, and everything possible has been done for the development and increase of co-operation.

But one of the greatest lines of endeavor has yet to be mentioned, namely the improvement of marketing and transportation facilities. Carefully and thoroughly investigating can be methodically and satisfactorily accomplished. With this principle in view a marketing commission was appointed, the duties of which were to ascertain advantageous points of sale and to effect and bring about the most convenient and economical arrangements for disposal, shipping and carriage to destination. It was in following this policy negotiations were carried on for the purchase by the British Government of six and a half million pounds of meat canned in Canada.

Owing to high freight rates, disturbances in shipping and scarcity of boats, unwonted difficulties have recently been experienced in exportation and even in handling across the continent. It is towards remedying these and placing matters in a much better light and on a greatly improved footing that the commission has been created. In many ways there is evidence that this is being accomplished, although undoubtedly there are obstacles to overcome that will be continually cropping up. Nor is the appointment of the aforementioned marketing commission the only step that is being taken for the advancement of the live stock and agricultural interests, but a commission of influential, widely-known and experienced business men has been appointed to go into the whole subject and to report upon the most advisable measures to be taken for the advancement of farming, breeding and raising, shipping and selling and financing, and for the aggregate prosperity of the country.

PRACTICAL FARMING

Hold on to the Good Breeders.

It is well known that the progeny from mature parents are superior to those descended from young progenitors not fully developed. Boars and sows, for breeding, should be kept in a good thrifty condition, but not fat, writes a well-known breeder of hogs.

The writer has always been troubled to keep his breeding sows from becoming too fat, and consequently, farrowing a small number of scrawny pigs.

I once took a large sow to fatten for one half the pork. I did not know she was with pig and fed her all the cornmeal and wheat middlings she would eat. Imagine my astonishment and vexation when she had three little dwarfed pigs—not only smaller than pigs usually are when first farrowed, but emaciated.

Sows for breeding should not be allowed to run with the fattening hogs fed on corn, but kept in a pasture by themselves and given a plentiful supply of slop, made of equal parts of wheat shorts, cornmeal and wheat bran.

Most young sows will breed when three months old, if allowed to run with a boar, but eight or twelve months is as young as it is judicious to breed them.

The pigs from large-bodied, old sows will be more in number, and frequently double the size of pigs from young sows when farrowed—and this with the same feed and care—and will frequently weigh 50 per cent. more at a year old. Not only this, but it stunts or dwarfs the growth of such young things permanently, and they never attain good size.

A neighbor of mine last year bought an old sow in the spring for $10. She had ten fine pigs in April, which were fattened and sold to a butcher in the fall of the same year, bringing him $115, and he still has the sow for a breeder.

Sows should be kept for a number of years until their places can be filled with younger ones which have proven to be good breeders.

Formerly, heavy pork from hogs, twelve to 24 months old (and the fatter the better) was demanded. Men who worked hard in the open air, said there was a wasting quality about pig-pork—that it shrunk in the pot "and did not stick to the ribs."

Fortunately, this call for heavy pork is decreasing. In the farmer's family, and with people generally employed in indoor occupations in the towns and cities, pork from younger hogs is preferred. This pork is not only the best, being the tenderest and sweetest, but it is the quickest produced, at a lower cost and at better profit to the producer.

Young animals grow faster and with less food than when they become older, and pork from a hog less than a year old does not cost so much to produce as the pork from old hogs.

To make the most money from hogs, none, except those kept for breeding purposes, should ever be wintered over.

A little alfalfa makes the corn stick to the pigs' ribs.

The well-fed litter of pigs must have an opportunity to exercise or else thumps are liable to claim the plumpest.

There are 20,000 different kinds of butterflies.

FOR HEADACHES, BILIOUSNESS CONSTIPATION,

INDIGESTION

Nearly all our minor ailments, and many of the serious ones, too, are traceable to some disorder of the stomach, liver, and bowels. If you wish to avoid the miseries of indigestion, acidity, heartburn, flatulence, headaches, constipation and a host of other distressing ailments, you must see to it that your stomach, liver and bowels are equal to the work they have to do. It is a simple matter to take 30 drops of Mother Seigel's Syrup daily, after meals, yet thousands of former sufferers have banished indigestion, biliousness, constipation, and all their distressing consequences in just this simple way. Prove by their experience. As a digestive tonic and stomachic remedy, Mother Seigel's Syrup is unsurpassed.

WORN WORRIED WOMEN

Her Many Duties Affect Her Health and Often She Breaks Down Completely.

It is little wonder that there are many times in a woman's life when she feels in despair. There is no nine-hour day for the busy housewife. There are a hundred thing about the home to keep her busy from the time she arises until it is again bed time, what is the result? Often her nerves give way, her good looks suffer, her blood becomes thin, her digestion is disturbed and her system threatened with a complete breakdown. Every woman should do all possible to protect her health and good looks, and there is one way in which she can do this, and that is by taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These actually make new, rich blood, strengthen every nerve and every organ, bring the glow of health to the cheeks and brightness to the eye. These pills have done more to make the lives of thousands of women sunshiny than anything else in the world. Mrs. Daniel Theal, Waterloo, Ont., says: "I was very much run down, my blood was thin and watery and I would faint at the least excitement. I suffered from headaches and dizziness, and often it seemed as though there were clouds before my eyes. Finally I was forced to go to bed with weakness. I doctored for six weeks while in bed without receiving any benefit. Finally I was induced to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and when I had taken ten boxes I was completely cured, and never felt better in my life. I am convinced that what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills did for me they will do for others, and I warmly recommend them to all weak women."

You can get these Pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

FREAK MEMORY REVEALED.

A Man Who Can Recite Walpole's "Old English Baron."

The possession of a freak memory was revealed during the course of a case of robbery tried recently at Melbourne. The prisoner declared that when the crime was committed he was in the hut of a man named Lane, hearing him recite Walpole's "Old English Baron," which occupied two hours and a half in the delivery. The jury disbelieved the statement, so Lane was called to prove that he was capable of the feat. He stepped into the witness-box and started reciting the story in a way that showed he knew it thoroughly. When he had gone on some time without a moment's hesitation the judge wanted him to stop, but counsel for the defence insisted upon proving his case by having the whole story repeated. Eventually, it was decided to admit the evidence if Lane could repeat the last page of the book. This being satisfactorily accomplished the alibi was allowed, and the prisoner received his discharge.

A VALUABLE MEDICINE FOR LITTLE ONES

Mrs. G. Morgan, Huntsville, Ont., writes:—"I wish every mother and especially young mothers knew the value of Baby's Own Tablets. They have certainly worked wonders with our baby. She was troubled with colic and constipation and cried all the time, but the Tablets soon put her right, and she is now a fine healthy child." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

INSTRUCTION IN LANGUAGES.

Englishmen Are Learning Polish and Balkan Dialects.

Glasses in Russian, French and Spanish are prospering in London as never before. It is recognized that Germany's great gains in trade were due largely to the pains German clerks and business men took to acquire foreign languages. Special courses in the Slav tongue, including Polish and the Balkan dialects, are now established at King's College, University of London. T. G. Masaryk, professor of philosophy in the Czech University of Prague and formerly a prominent politician in the Austrian Parliament, is the head of the school.

Instruction in the languages will be accompanied by lectures in Slavonic history and literature. Spanish is rather the latest to be taken up; just as Russian was the first after the outbreak of the war. The Welsh people, on account of being bilingual, are the cleverest students in language and the Scotch next, according to the teachers.

Formidable List of United States Railroads in Receiver's Hands

Among U.S. railroads the intervention of the receiver has been so frequent, and has concerned so many important systems, that this official is no longer considered an omen of approaching dissolution, but rather, in cases, the promise of economical administration. Figures issued by the Bureau of Railway News and Statistics, Chicago, show that there were twenty-eight railway companies of more or less importance in the hands of receivers at the close of the calendar year 1914, in addition to nearly forty minor roads. The combined length of these larger railways operated by receivers amounted to 19,449 miles, with a total capitalization of no less than $1,376,678,913. They include the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad, with excellent services in the southwest; the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railroad, with one of the best services between Chicago and St. Louis; the Wabash, with its strong geographical position, providing short line mileage between many important cities in the Middle West; the Pere Marquette, serving thickly populated districts in Michigan; and the Toledo, St. Louis and Western Railroad, known as the Clover Leaf Route, traversing the progressive states of Indiana and Illinois. The receivership record for 1914 is as follows:

The total capitalization, stocks and bonds was $1,376,678,000. Eliminating duplications, the net capitalization is less than $60,000 per mile.

In the thirty-seven years, from 1876 to 1913, the records show that not less than 764 U.S. roads, with an operated length of 145,176 miles, and with $8,262,453,000 capital stock and funded debt, passed into receivers' hands. Among these were included such properties as the Northern Pacific, Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, that were subsequently reorganized and placed upon a profitable basis. Other important lines which have gone into receivership in 1915 include old established properties, such as the Missouri Pacific System, with a length operated of 9,670 miles. The stock of the Missouri Pacific a few years ago was selling above par, and it is still considered to be a road with considerable possibilities.

A FARMER'S CHARACTER.

Conditions of His Herds, Buildings, Fences and Grounds Usually Tell Correctly.

The conditions which any man creates about him are apt to reflect his own character to a very large degree. When you pass a farm that is well tilled, with fences, roads and lanes in good order, when you see in the field a herd of good cattle, well fed, thrifty and contented, it is a pretty safe conclusion that the owner and master is a man of a certain type of character, and that one to be approved of. You will probably find him to be a man of quiet and dignified manner. That is the first point about a character such as will mark the man who keeps his farm premises in good order and good repair, who will own such stock, and keep them in such condition. If fields are well tilled and fences in good repair, it is safe to assume that the stable premises will be comfortable and neat and trim. His herd of cattle and their condition bear further evidence of the fact. A man possessed of simple energy and activity may keep his premises neat, but his kind of character is apt rather to find expression in the performance of a lot of hard work, that will display more or less of irregularity in its performance. It takes a nature that is orderly, a mind that is deliberate and studious, thoughtful and considerate, to direct energies to the best all round advantage. These are the characteristics to expect in the man whose farm and its herds impresses you, in this favorable way, as you pass along the road.—Canadian Countryman.

Compensatory.

Nature bestows her own compensations: if a man is fat he is usually endowed with a jolly, optimistic temperament.

One Effect of Prohibition.

"The rapid increase in dry territory in the United States has resulted in a shortage of tea, according to Geo. F. Mitchell, supervising tea examiner of Treasury Department. Tea stocks in the United States are lower than they have ever been. The price of tea is advancing steadily."—Chicago "Tribune," April 22nd.

Unmasculine.

Tommy had a profound contempt for the little boy next door, who threw a ball like a girl, seldom had on any but a clean shirt and who generally wore gloves.

"Do you know why he's a sissy?" asked Tommy of his aunt. "It's 'cause he looks just like his mother, and that shows he's got girl blood in him."

Dynamite was first experimented with at Mertsham in 1868.

POTATO AND FORAGE CROPS.

So Abundant as to Compensate Shortage in Wheat.

Senator Jules Meline, former president of the French Cabinet, presiding at the annual meeting of the Agricultural Assembly, presented statistics showing that the potato and forage crops this year are so abundant as to compensate the shortage in wheat. The excess of hay produced over other years will enable the feeding of enough live stock to make up for all the necessary requisitions of meat for the army.

"The culminating point in the meat crisis," he says, "will come after the war, when all the belligerent nations will have pressing needs with reduced means of production. Consequently the forage crop means quite as much to France as its production of wheat."

How You May Throw Away Your Glasses

"The statement is made that thousands wear eyeglasses who do not really need them. If you are one of these unfortunates, then these glasses may be ruining your eyes instead of helping them. Thousands who wear these "windows" may prove for themselves that they can get on with glasses if they will get the following prescription filled at once: Go to any active drug store and get a bottle of Bon-Opto tablets; fill a two ounce bottle with warm water and drop in one Bon-Opto tablet. With this harmless liquid solution bathe the eyes two to four times daily, and you are likely to see almost at the results right from the start. Many who have been told that they have astigmatism, eye strain, cataract, sore eyelids, weak eyes, conjunctivitis and other eye disorders, report wonderful benefits from the use of this prescription. Get this prescription filled and use it; you may see strong enough to discard glasses will not be necessary. Thousands who are blind, or nearly so, or who wear glasses might never have required them if they had cared for their eyes in time. Save your eyes before it is too late! Do not become one of these victims of neglect. Eyeglasses are only the crutches, and every few years they must be changed to fit the ever increasing weakened condition, so better use if you can, like many others, get clear, healthy, strong magnetic eyes through the prescription here given. The Valmas Drug Co. of Toronto will fill the above prescription by mail, if your druggist cannot.

Winning Is All Nonsense.

One day, while her grandfather was paying a visit to Florence's home, the little girl said to him:—"Gran'pa, your talk about perseverance winning is all nonsense." "Well, well," cried grandfather, "why do you say that?" "Why," said the little girl, "I've worked at the afternoon blowing soap bubbles and trying to pin them on mother's hat."

Death of John Shipley

Now few are left to tell the tale
Of backwoods life in the first decade,
For one by one till all were gone,
The ranks grew thin of the first brigade.
The brave old settlers bent and sere,
Folding forever their big brown hands,
There were but clay and passed away
Like gems that fall in sinking sands.

These lines have been suggested to me by the death of one of Blanshard's oldest pioneers, the late John Shipley, who was interred in St Paul's churchyard, Kirkton, on Wednesday last. The late Mr Shipley was a typical pioneer. Born in Northumberland, England, at the age of four years he was brought to Canada with his parents, settling in the township of Lobo, county of Middlesex. In 1845, or four years subsequent to the survey of Blanshard, he leased from the Canada Company lot 12, con. 11 of that municipality, removing afterwards to lot 3, con 10. All this section for many miles was a wilderness where a white man's foot had never trod. But with strong determination and force of character which was characteristic of all pioneers, he built his humble shanty, came with his ax and his youthful partner in life and dared to conquer the hardships and trials inseparable from existence in the pathless wilds. After so life finally making his home in the woods, at the age of 23 years he married Mary Walker who with that heroism of character eminently peculiar to womankind, endured with patient affection the joys and sorrows of life in the solitary forest, still telling on in the humble shanty day after day, year after year, looking forward and hoping for the best. Eleven children were born: Edward, in Bruce Tp; Lionel, in Keppel; Joseph in Stanley; James, in Blanshard on the old homestead; Mrs George and Mrs McDonald, in Port Elgin; Mrs McConnell, in Kincardine; Mrs Dadling in Detroit; John and Mrs Prouse dead. The late Mr Shipley was a man of sterling principle, honest and reliable. During a most fortunate acquaintance with him and his family for a period of over fifty years, although I have often seen him in difficulties financially and otherwise, I never saw him lose his temper or lose hope of ultimate triumph over his backwoods troubles. He was a sweet singer and his voice, returning from a logging bee, could often be heard echoing through the silent forest the well known strains of "Donald McDonald," followed by the loud cheers of his companions in toil, long since no more. The kind-hearted old settler at the age of 93 years sleeps sound beside the remains of his aged partner who preceded him 15 years ago. In his body was laid to rest the last of the pioneers of this section of Blanchard.

There are few old settlers now,
So loyal, kind and true,
The pioneers frail, worn and grey,
Long since have struggled there.
We will follow in the trail,
Till we step within the vale,
To meet them on yon bright sunny morning.

The $1.50 Weekly

THE publisher of a weekly newspaper finds that he is compelled to increase the price of the paper from $1.00 to $1.50 per annum. The reason of this is the increase in the price of so many materials entering into the cost of their production. White paper has advanced in price. Metal has been advanced in price. Type that once could be purchased for 45 cents a pound to-day costs 94 cents. The year has had its effect on all trades, but few have felt it as heavily as the newspaper. Receiving $1.00 for a paper never was a paying proposition, but the increase all along the line makes the cost considerably more than that sum. One Bruce county publisher has carefully figured out the actual cost in his office, and finds it to be $1.74 for each paper he issues. The falling profits from advertising leave a deficit to the producer and he is compelled to raise the price of the weekly newspaper. In Bruce county the raise will be to $1.50. However, all who pay their subscriptions in advance and before the 31st of January, 1916, will receive their paper at the old rate of $1.00 for the year 1916. After that it will be $1.50. Necessity compels the publisher to take this step which he should have taken long ago.

WALKERTON

Norman Kunkel, a Chepstow young man, while clinging down a tree at Cargill's lumber camp in Greenock, met with a painful accident last week, when the ax glanced off the tree and entered the calf of his leg, making a painful and gaping wound.

Phillip Weller of Formosa was the other day fined $10 and costs by Magistrate Johnston at Kinlough for holding a raffle at a shooting match at Formosa on Thanksgiving Day and disposing of turkeys, geese and ducks by games of chance. A nice point in the law has been opened up in this case and it is possible it hasn't seen the last of the courts yet. Mr Weller had been served with a summons to appear at Kinlough, it seems he pleaded guilty before a Formosa magistrate and paid $1 and costs for this offence. As you can't hang a man twice for the same crime, the question is whether the Formosa fine of $1 00 will save Weller from cashing over the $10 punishment inflicted at Kinlough, or whether a man already summoned to appear at one court can annul this summons by pleading guilty in another court. The problem for the legal courts to decide is whether the first summons or the first fine prevails.

The indigents who die in the House of Refuge at Walkerton and whose friends don't immediately claim their remains for burial, are no longer to be buried by the County, and await the resurrection trumpet in a potter's plot here, but according to Government instructions received by Keeper Wiles the other day, are to be handed over to Mr Eli Myles, local undertaker, who is to embalm the bodies and ship them to Ontario Medical Schools for dissecting purposes. Although this at first looks like a cold-blooded proceeding, yet the need for bodies for demonstrative purposes for medical students, who by cutting up the dead are supposed to learn how to preserve the living, is a worthy work that will well warrant the ghastly sacrifices made. Nor need it be heart-rending to the relatives of the poor, for anybody can rescue a deceased friend from the students' hands by applying for the remains shortly after death. The bodies on arrival at the schools are put in cold storage and are dissected from time to time as the demonstration work proceeds. Some crookers will probably say that no use has been made in vain—kicked about in life and cussed up in death. But the brighter side of the picture is that a man's usefulness doesn't end with his life, as he is still of some little good after death.—Herald and Times.

CONCERT AT GLAMIS

Bugler Sanders Tells of Life in the Trenches

The patriotic tea-meeting was a real success. The tea provided by the ladies of St Paul's church was complimented on all sides as it well deserved to be. The basement of the church where the tea was served was decorated with hunting of red, white and blue, and patriotic flags, all of which presented a fine appearance hanging over the loaded tables. The lady waiters, all dressed in white, with a pretty Red Cross band on the left arm, looked charming and did their part to the entire satisfaction of all concerned. When tea was over the auditorium of the church, which was also suitably decorated with flags and flowers in profusion, was filled to overflowing, when a splendid program was carried out to the apparent pleasure of all concerned, Rev Mr Reith presiding. Deserving special mention was a solo by Miss McIntyre "The Call of the Motherland," well rendered and highly appreciated; a solo also by Mr Duncan McLennan, "The Red, White and Blue," rendered in Duncan's best style, fairly brought down the house. The applause in both cases by the audience fully proved entire satisfaction with both renditions.

The feature of the evening, however, was the address of Bugler Sanders, of the Queen's Own, Toronto, one of the first overseas contingent and one of the heroes of St Julien who, as Sir John French put it, saved the British Empire and upheld the best traditions of the British army. Bugler Sanders received a bullet below the knee and one above the knee. He said in the hospital in France they thought his leg would have to be amputated, but his own pleading not to do so prevailed, and he was sent to England and a Japanese surgeon saved it for him. He has nothing but praise for the Japs. Bugler Sanders gave the audience a splendid address, having come specially for this meeting. He is overflowing with enthusiasm and has no fear of the defeat of the Allies, but says everybody must do their bit and if they can't go to the front they can help support those who do go, not only with their good wishes but with their money, and keep it up till victory is complete. He spoke of the great service of the Red Cross, how important it was, how needful and how appreciated by the poor shrapnel-torn soldiers under the care of the Red Cross nurses and doctors. He said the hospitals were well equipped and well managed and every attention possible paid to the wounded and suffering soldiers. He paid a high tribute to the women of the land who have done and are doing so much to supply the needs of the soldiers in the trenches and out of them. He thought if the men were as patriotic as the ladies there would be no need to even talk of conscription. His address throughout was most interesting and listened to with close attention. He is a neat, slim-built man, soldier-like and worthy of the khaki which he wears. He has no use for conscription or conscripts; the boys in the trenches would not fight beside conscripts. They are in a class by themselves. Perhaps the most amusing part of the evening's program was the slipping of a cake made by Mrs Stevenson specially for the evening, and the boys played no mean part in converting it into money for the Red Cross funds, and the older men did not let them have it all their own way, as a lot of them kept things going lively. However, the boys won out and the cake went to Dave Robertson, who at once walked over and presented it to Bugler Sanders to take to his wife. It was very evident both the young men and older ones manifested their patriotism to swell the funds as the chief motive. When it was announced that the cake made $108 in such a short time, and apparently could have been doubled, no one was more pleased than Mrs Stevenson, a woman of 75 years, who made it, and also presented a keepsake handkerchief to the soldier who graciously received all to the gratification of the whole audience. After singing the national anthem the meeting dispersed. Proceeds amounted to $82. The amount remitted to Red Cross is $72 80.

PUTNAM & SON

The Late Robt. Barrie

Heart trouble caused the death of a former resident of the Lovat section, in the person of Mr. Robert Barrie, who passed away on Dec. 3rd, at Perth, Ont. The deceased was born in Dalhousie, in Lanark Co., in 1840. He came up to Bruce County in 1884 and farmed at Lovat until 1905, when he disposed of his property to Mr Robt. McKeeman and returned to Perth, where he lived with his sister, Mrs. Wm. Craig, until his death. Mr. Barrie had never married. The remains were accompanied to Paisley by his brother-in-law, Mr. Craig. The funeral took place on Wednesday last, from the residence of his brother, Mr. Wm. Barrie. Interment was made in the Lovat Cemetery.

Greenock's Oldest Resident Is Dead

Mr James Pinkerton, of the 12th con of Greenock, passed to his reward on Dec 2nd, aged 90 years and 6 months. The deceased was the last member of the old Pinkerton family who were among the early settlers and played a prominent part in the life of the township for many years. James Pinkerton was a prosperous farmer, and highly respected. His wife, who was a sister of John and Alex Cameron, predeceased him by several years. He is survived by five sons and two daughters—Arthur, Thomas and James, at Rocanville Sask; Wesley and Alexander, at home; Mrs D Barrie in Saskatchewan; and Miss Eunice at home.

Willow Creek Bridge Assumed by County Council

Ever since the first session he attended County Council two years ago Reeve Ballachey has, whenever the opportunity occurred of doing so, presented the claim of Paisley to have the Queen St. bridge across Willow Creek maintained by the county. This year a committee was appointed to make measurements and report to council. Upon the report being submitted to council last week, a motion to make this a county bridge was passed by a large majority. The county council has now a list of all bridges assumed, and hereafter there will be no uncertainty as to whether the local municipality or the county should pay for any repairs required on any of these structures.

Saugeen Politics

Whether the European war ends abruptly or not by New Year's, there is going to be something of an election contest in Saugeen Tp. Warden McConnel is stepping aside to allow someone else to advance to the reeveship of the township. Two aspirants are already in the field—Councillor Gilbert Christie and ex-councillor Geo. Jamieson. With these two in the field there would be a decidedly interesting contest. The event may develop into a three-cornered fight, however, as Councillor Dugald Smith may also decide to make a try for the reeveship. For the council there will be no dearth of material. Councillor Chappel wishes to retire, but Councillor Alex Brunton will run again. Others mentioned as probable candidates are Messrs. John Scott, Jr Walker, Wm. Walker, John Shanks, Melbert Dier.

The Housewife's Corner

Selected Recipes.

Quince Marmalade is delicious. To make it pare, core and slice enough quinces to weigh 4 pounds and enough apples to weigh 2 pounds. Pour over them 2 quarts of water and the juice of two lemons and boil until tender. Add 3 pounds of sugar and boil carefully until it is of the thickness of marmalade. Be careful not to burn after the sugar is added. Pour into jars and seal.

This is a good recipe for salmon, salad sandwiches. Take one pound can of salmon, one tablespoonful of any preferred salad dressing; two tablespoonfuls of finely chopped sour cucumber pickles; one teaspoonful of grated onion or onion juice, one-half teaspoonful mixed salt and pepper. Mix thoroughly and spread between thin slices of bread.

Ripe Olive Salad.—One can ripe olives, one-half cup chopped walnuts, one-half red pepper, two tablespoons grated pineapple. Drain, halve and seed olives and mix with celery, walnuts, pepper and pineapple. Mix well with three tablespoons French dressing. Serve on white lettuce leaves with tablespoon mayonnaise on each portion, in centre of which place one stoned olive.

Amber Apple Pudding.—Into pint scalded milk stir one cup yellow soft cornmeal and one quart sliced sweet apples. Add one-half teaspoon salt and one cup molasses. Mix thoroughly, add two quarts milk, pour into large buttered dish and bake in slow oven four hours. When cold, clear amber-colored jelly will be found to have formed through pudding and apples will be rich brown.

Potato Timbales.—Wash and boil potatoes, with their jackets on, in boiling water to cover. When soft, cool slightly, peel, chop and season with salt and pepper, then moisten with cream. Brush timbale molds generously with butter and sprinkle with soft stale bread crumbs, using none of crusts. Pack in potato mixture, put in pan in hot oven and bake until crumbs are brown. Remove to hot serving dish and garnish with sprigs of parsley.

For an appetizing dish try this of fish and eggs. Four hard-boiled eggs, one dozen shrimps, two boned anchovies, two tablespoonfuls butter and one tablespoonful white sauce. Shell eggs, cut in halves roundways, take out the yolks, put them in a mortar with the shrimps and anchovies and pound all to a smooth paste. Next rub the mixture through a sieve, put it back in the mortar with the butter and sauce, poured smoothly and season carefully. Fill the whites of egg with the mixture and arrange with lettuce and olives.

An Englishman has said that although the quince is a fruit not nearly so good as the apple, it improves an apple pie "beyond the power of words to describe." That is, of course, extravagant, but there is much to commend in the combination. In making this ideal pie, use a little more than twice the quantity of tart apples as you do quince. Stew the quinces until soft, before making the pie, because the quince takes so much longer to cook than the apple. Then with rich pie crust proceed as for the usual apple pie. For quince pudding pare, core and quarter seven medium-sized quinces, boil them soft, mash them and rub them through a sieve. Add the yolks of four eggs, a pint of rich milk and sugar to taste. Flavor with a quarter of a teaspoonful of ginger and the same of cinnamon. Bake in a buttered baking dish. Beat the whites of the eggs, sweeten with four tablespoonfuls of sugar, and put on top of the pudding; brown in the oven. Eat either hot or cold.

Useful Hints.

Use paper bags for covering pitchers with food in them.

Use hot water, ammonia and washing powder to clean mops.

Tea should be kept in an airtight tin in a cool place.

"Household" flour is more nourishing than the finer varieties.

Meat loses less weight by being stewed than if cooked by any other method.

Water the fern dish at night in the bathtub and leave it there to drain.

Loaf pans for bread should be narrow to insure thorough baking of the bread.

A measuring cup and flour sifter should be kept in the flour barrel to save time.

As a rule, about half a pint of liquid is needed to moisten one pound of flour for pastry-making.

Add a cupful of boiled rice when next you make a beef loaf and it will keep nice and moist till eaten.

A housekeeper can save time by using casseroles of attractive earthenware, in which food may be both cooked and served.

Tinned foodstuffs should not be eaten if they are the least bit fermented, or if a rush of air meets you when the tin is pierced.

It is important to see that your umbrella is perfectly dry before rolling it up, otherwise the ribs will very soon rust and the cover will rot.

Children will go to bed, wash and get up much more easily if they are sometimes allowed to make a play of the various steps of their doings.

Ink can be removed from washing material by sprinkling a little tomato juice on the stain; after leaving for a few minutes wash in the usual way.

Open tinned meat in the dark. If the contents exhibit any phosphorescence, they should be condemned, and returned to the shop from which they came.

Reserve a drawer or box for paper from parcels and for string. If this is folded and put away it will ease the work of doing up parcels, and probably save shillings in the year.

It is a good plan to buy a cheap teapot for melting paraffine. Always keep it for that purpose. The melted paraffine pours so easily just where it is wanted and need not be all used at one time.

If you adapt the height of your kitchen table to the height of your cook you will save her much backache and weariness. If the table is too tall, supply a wooden mat to stand on; if it is too low, raise it on four blocks.

TWO SCOTCH SIMPLETONS.

Mr. D. Macleod Malloch Tells a Couple of Good Stories.

Side by side with anecdotes of its wits and great folk, the town with a history rarely fails to preserve and cherish traditions of its simpletons. In a recent volume, Mr. D. Macleod Malloch has given several such from the annals of Glasgow.

A Scotch gentleman of that city had in his employ at one time a simple-minded groom, faithful, but far from intelligent, who was frequently dependent over the omissions and mistakes that he too often committed. One day, going unexpectedly into the stables, the master was amazed to discover him dangling in mid-air at the end of a trace, the other end of which was buckled round a beam. The spectacle was mystifying, but no more, since the end attached to the pendent body was not about the neck, but firmly buckled about the waist.

"What on earth are you up to now?" demanded the master.

"I'm tryin' to hang myself, sir," said the man wearily but respectfully.

"Then why didn't you tie the trace round your neck?" inquired his employer curiously.

"I did try that way once, sir," responded the groom in discouraged tones, "but I couldna breathe."

He was unbuckled, scolded, and diverted from his suicidal intent even more easily than another Glasgow simpleton, one Jock, assistant cook in the house of Sir John Maxwell, was diverted from a much more vigorous attempt at murderous assault. In a dispute with the cook on some point of duty, that high-spirited personage had so far forgotten herself as to hit him with a shovel. Jock's good nature suddenly forsook him at the affront; also his chivalry. Snatching up a long, three-pronged fork, Jock launched himself with a howl of rage in the cook's direction, and she fled before the onset. Outdoors she dashed, with Jock at her heels, and round and round the lawn went the chase, pursuer and pursued leaping madly over flower beds as they ran. But Jock was lean and agile, and cook, as is the wont of cooks, was fat and scant of breath. She felt that her end was nigh; she could run no longer, and the fateful prongs were at her back, when a flash of native wit came to her rescue. Whirling about to face the frantic avenger, she put her arms akimbo, and with her hands on her hips called to him with a laugh as he came up:

"Man, Jock, that's been a race!"

Jock dropped the fork with a pleased grin, and replied pridefully, "Hech! Ye may say't!"

Leave Well Alone.

She was engaged, and he was a very nice young man, but all the same she could not help wishing to reform him in some way. Accordingly, as they sat side by side one night, she said, "William, we should all make some sacrifice in our lives. My brother Harry has given up smoking. What are you going to do?" "I think, love," replied the young man, "I shall deny myself the pleasure of kissing you. That will be a great sacrifice." And was the maiden pleased? Of course she was not. Three days elapsed, and again they sat side by side. "I have something to tell you, William," she murmured. "What is it?" said William. "Only this, dearest," she whispered. "My brother Harry has started to smoke again."

POPULAR AND SMART.

It doesn't matter how dressy a style may be or how much comfort it may give the wearer it must eventually and uncomplainingly allow itself to be changed in the interest of "art in dress."

A notable instance of this is the semi-princess, one-piece model illustrated herewith. The princess lines are apparent, but the departure is also evident.

Pattern No. 9178, selected from the Ladies' Home Journal, is very simple, and is easily made. The shaped girdle and box plaits in back may be used or left away as desired.

Cuts in sizes 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust measure, and requires in size 36 6½ yards 36-inch material with ⅞ yard 30-inch contrasting satin.

This pattern may be obtained for 15 cents, as well as many other beautiful designs, either at your local Ladies' Home Journal Pattern dealer or from the Home Pattern Company, 183 George Street, Toronto, Ontario.

FOR WINTER WEAR.

A waist for every occasion is a dress ideal devoutly to be desired, and most women would certainly have a larger supply of waists if they knew how inexpensively they can be made with the use of a paper pattern.

The waist illustrated herewith, No. 9171, selected from the Ladies' Home Journal, demonstrates how combinations of tucks and box plaits are cleverly achieved.

Cuts in sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 2⅞ yards of 36-inch material.

This pattern may be obtained for 15 cents, as well as many other beautiful designs, either at your local Ladies' Home Journal dealer, or from the Home Pattern Company, 183 George Street, Toronto, Ontario.

A WAR INCIDENT.

Joy Ride Round the Boulevards of Paris.

Even in the ambulance service of a great war, where pathos, tragedy and death are to be met with on every hand, amusing, human little incidents occur that serve as rays of light to break the black monotony of constant grief. Mr. Howard Copland, who has been engaged in the Red Cross service in Paris, tells an appealing little incident that occurred in the course of the daily routine:

My work one morning was more cheerful than usual. I had dismounted all my scaffolding for holding stretchers, and my ambulance was once again an omnibus, with benches along each side. I had five convalescent soldiers to take to their place of departure from Paris, after several weeks in our hospital.

I did not take them to their place of departure—and therein lies my crime! But I afterward confessed the truth to the head nurse, who replied, after some reflection, "Well, Monsieur Copland, because you are a stranger here it will always be possible to say that you lost your way in the great city of Paris."

We waited in the courtyard of the hospital, and Madame la Directrice shook hands with four of my convalescents and repeated words of cheer and said bon voyage; but "General Pau" did not come, nor could he be found. And Madame la Directrice repeated words of cheer and kept saying bon voyage for a quarter of an hour until a "boy skoot" found General Pau (like his namesake, now with only one arm) somewhere in the wards, repeating his thanks and shaking his one hand with all ces dames who had been so lovely to him. General Pau was lovable and impayable, and he won me at once.

He had never seen Paris, having lived all his life in Bordeaux, where he is a stonecutter, but if there was one thing more than another that he did want to see, it was Paris; and for six weeks he had flattened his face against the windows of his ward trying to see all of Paris that would pass by the little narrow street outside. Four in all of my five had never seen Paris, and after to-day they stood little chance of ever doing so.

So I committed my crime, and if it is ever known more widely, my Red Cross career is over. For I had two of these men on the driver's seat beside me, and the other two had good seats at the open door behind, and I took them such a "joy ride"! All round the boulevards! I stopped in the Place du Carrousel and had them descend to see the straight view past the Obelisk to the Arc de Triomphe at the end; I pointed out the place where the guillotine stood on the Place de la Concorde, and showed them the big tomb where Napoleon lies under the Invalides.

Here is the most touching part of the story: When I left that stonemason from Bordeaux with his un bras de moins in his empty sleeve, after the forbidden joy ride round the boulevards, he said to me, "On me gate jurqu'a la fin!" (They are spoiling me right up to the end.) This poor stonemason, called from his family and his humble work, thrown into a hell of ten weeks of fighting in the trenches, and sent back with only one arm, so that he can never be a stonemason again, could only find thoughts to thank all ces dames at the hospital for having been so good to him! And ravished by the marvellous drive that I gave him, "On me gate jusqu'a la fin!"

THE WILLOW GROUSE.

Who Winter Dress Is White, In Summer Reddish Brown.

In America, from Newfoundland north and northwest far beyond the arctic circle, lives the bird called the willow grouse, a species of ptarmigan. On the barren grounds of Canada immense flocks of ptarmigans take the place that the prairie chicken once occupied on the plains of our own West.

The willow grouse comes south into the spruce timber in winter and flies back in the spring far into the arctic regions. So far does his breeding range extend beyond the habitable portions of the globe that few are familiar with him, except the big-game hunter, the Indian, and the Eskimo.

In winter, the willow grouse is dressed all in white, except his jaunty tail, which is jet black, as are the quill shafts of his wings. His summer dress is of a reddish brown, not unlike that of the prairie chicken, although it may be blotched and spotted with white feathers, for he moults three times a year, and seems to don his new overcoat one feather at a time. His winter suit is as dense, soft and fluffy as that of the great arctic owl; the feathers extend to his very toenails, and spread into a kind of snowshoe that carries him lightly over the newly fallen snow. The ptarmigan resembles the snowy owl also in the ghostlike way in which he flits from swamp to log with never a rustle of his wings.

Owing to the thickness and warmth of his jacket, our ptarmigan is as comfortable deep down under a snow-drift as a goldfish in its bowl of water. When the winter air becomes too sharp, or this hardy bird desires to go to bed, down he plunges into the snow, works his way far under it, and there remains snug and warm until he thinks it time for breakfast. Except for a few months in midsummer, when the young are being hatched and reared, the entire life of the grouse is spent where the ground is covered with snow. Northern travellers declare that even baby ptarmigans "dust" in snow bank, just as quail or ruffed grouse do in the dust of a well-used summer road.

The strangest feature of ptarmigan life is that the birds have become almost as nocturnal as their fiercest foe, the snowy owl. His relatives, including the ruffed grouse, prairie chicken, wild turkey, and pheasant, go to roost at dusk, and there remain until morning. The ptarmigan, however, prefers to forage at night. Hunters relate strange tales of fine ptarmigan shooting at midnight, when the birds fly as boldly as prairie chickens do at noon.

A reasonable explanation of the ptarmigan's strange habit of turning night into day or day into night—strange because he has not the night-seeing eyes of nocturnal birds—lies in the unusual conditions of light and darkness with which he has to contend. In his midsummer home beyond the arctic circle the July days are very long indeed, and our little grouse must take his eat nap while the northern sun is still glaring at him over the rim of the world. On the other hand, through December and January the sun deserts him for many days in succession, and, being a bird of splendid digestion and a voracious feeder, he could not possibly wait until "sunup" for his breakfast. In the course of time, therefore, he has come to treat the matter of daylight or darkness with supreme indifference.

HOW BISHOP WON FAME.

Never Tried to Repeat Feat That Made His Reputation.

An amusing story of how he won the title of being the champion coconut shier among the clergy is told by the Bishop of Chelmsford.

He informed a gathering of clergymen, says the London Chronicle, that when vicar of Bethnal Green he took a party of workingmen to Epping Forest and was there challenged to have a shy at the coconuts.

He accepted and, paying his sixpence, was given seven balls. Then something happened which would not happen again were he to live to be as old as Methuselah. With those seven balls he knocked off seven coconuts. He has lived on the reputation of that feat ever since, and when any one asked him to have a coconut shy, he said, "You go and knock seven off with seven balls and then I will speak to you."

Did His Bit.

There was once a rich but very mean old lady who paid her servants as little as possible, and kept very few. One of her staff was a thin, miserable-looking lad of twelve, who answered the door, did the knives and the windows, waited at table, weeded the garden, washed the poodle, and had the rest of the time to himself. One visitor asked him, "Well, my boy, and what do you do here?" "I do a butler and a gardener out of a job!" snapped the lad sourly.

Eliza's Way.

Former Mistress—"I would like to give you a good recommendation, Eliza, but my conscience compels me to state that you never got the meals ready at the proper time. I wonder how I can put it in a nice sort of way?"

Eliza—"You might say that I got the meals the same as I got me pay."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, DECEMBER 19.

Golden Text: Luke 2. 10.

I. The Angel's Proclamation (Verses 8-14).

Verse 8. In the same country—The hills in which David spent his youth, where he fought the lion and the bear (1 Sam. 17. 34, 35).

Keeping watch — By "turns" they kept "nightwatches."

9. Stood by them — A sudden appearance.

The glory of the Lord—The brightness which is a sign of God's presence (see Luke 9. 31, 32; 2 Cor. 3. 18; and frequently in the Old Testament, Exod. 16. 7, 10; 24. 17; 40. 34, etc.).

10. Be not afraid—See Luke 1. 13, 30; 5. 10; Matt. 14. 27; 28. 5, 10.

Which shall be to all the people—The announcement of the Messiah had significance for all peoples because no one was to be shut out from the grace and ministry of Jesus. He was not to be a local Saviour for the Hebrews. Because they could not pre-empt him they rejected him.

11. To you—Even to the shepherds, "perhaps a specially despised part of them, of the people of Israel," Jesus was to come.

13. A multitude of the heavenly host—The whole host was praising God; a multitude was visible to the shepherds.

14. In the highest, and on earth—The glory of God was not to be confined to heaven, it was also to be upon earth. And this implied all that goes with the glory of God: peace, love, joy, righteousness, truth.

II. The Verification of the Shepherds (Verses 15-20).

15. Let us now go—In the darkness and quietude which followed when the heavenly light ceased to shine and the angelic host to sing, the shepherds were neither afraid nor dumfounded. They immediately put what they had heard to the test. The force of the Greek is that they immediately and repeatedly said to each other, "Let us go." They had no doubt as to what they would find.

17. They made known—Not only to Joseph and Mary, but to the inhabitants of Bethlehem generally.

19. But Mary kept all these sayings—Not only what the shepherds repeated to her, but all that had been foretold to both Joseph and her.

20. Glorifying—As men show special honor to men (1 Sam. 15. 30); as man glorifies God (Exod. 15. 2); as God magnifies man (Psa. 91. 15). See also John 8. 54; 11. 4; 17. 4, etc.; Acts 3. 13.

INTERESTING TRICK.

Having selected a good sized hen's egg, we prick the shell at two points and blow or draw out the contents. Then, placing the shell aside to get perfectly dry inside, obtain a small quantity of quicksilver—half a teaspoonful or even less, will be sufficient.

With care, so that none may be lost, we pour the quicksilver into the egg, having previously stopped up one of the holes with sealing wax. Then, when the quicksilver is all inside, we seal up the second hole, and whiten over the two small patches of sealing wax so that they appear part of the shell. All is now ready for the performance. We place the egg on the surface of a large pool or pond, give it a push, and immediately it begins to dance about just as though it were alive, and this action it keeps up.

The explanation is that the push, the wind, and the ripples give the eggshell a slight movement, which is greatly increased by the heavy quicksilver inside continually trying to find its own level. The result is that the motion continues.

As a trick to be performed before others, everything depends upon the natural appearance of the egg.

IMMUNE FROM COBRA POISON.

Egg Flip as an Antidote for Snake Bite.

India's annual loss of over 20,000 lives from snake bite has forced the production of an antidote serum. The Parel Laboratory, Bombay, keeps a supply of cobras from which venom is extracted every ten days. The snakes are forcibly fed with egg flip through a tube. The venom is dried over lime and then dissolved in a salt solution.

Increasing doses are injected in a horse until at the end of two years the animal can stand a dose 200 times the original one and is quite immune from the cobra poison. The serum from the blood of this particular horse is an antidote and is absolutely effective if injected in time. Many lives have been saved by its use. However, each bite requires an antidote made from the venom of the same sort of snake that inflicted the bite.

Sweets for Christmas

The following recipes will produce results which are both delicious and wholesome. Most of them are simple to make, and none of them is very expensive.

Chocolate Caramels. — Mix one quarter of a pound of grated chocolate (unsweetened), a pound of brown sugar, four tablespoonfuls of butter, half a cupful of cream and half a cupful of molasses. Place over a slow fire, stirring until the ingredients are thoroughly melted and mixed. Do not stir again; but boil the mixture until it is brittle when a few drops are placed in ice water for half a minute. Remove from the fire and add a teaspoonful of vanilla; pour the candy into a thoroughly-greased, shallow pan and allow it to cool. When nearly cold, cut into squares with a greased sharp knife; then cool further, and when hard, wrap each square separately in waxed paper, and put it in a dry place. It is best not to try to make caramels in damp or rainy weather.

Should you prefer vanilla caramels, substitute vanilla for the chocolate flavoring.

Crystallized Pop-corn. — Take enough kernels to make three quarts of pop-corn when finished. Put them into a popper and, shaking the popper up and down, hold it under the cold water faucet until all of the kernels are thoroughly saturated. Place it on the back of the range to dry, after which you can can pop it in the regular manner over a hot fire, shaking the popper all the time. This method of treatment will prevent the usual hard centres in the kernels.

To crystallize the pop-corn, mix a cupful of granulated sugar, one tablespoonful of butter and three tablespoonfuls of water; boil until it candies. Then stir in the three quarts of pop-corn and mix until all of the corn is well covered. Pour on sheets of buttered paper to cool.

Frosted Fudge.—Mix three cupfuls of sugar, a cupful of milk, two squares of chocolate and one tablespoonful of butter; bring slowly to a boil. Then boil hard for about five minutes. Remove from the stove; add a teaspoonful of vanilla, and beat until thick and creamy. The secret of good fudge lies in the beating. Some cooks boil longer and beat less; but the better plan by far is to boil as little as possible (usually only until the mixture in the pot will follow the spoon) and then to beat regularly in the same direction until the mixture is of sufficient consistency. When this stage has been reached, turn the fudge into a buttered, shallow pan and place it just inside the oven.

Now boil one-half cupful of milk and two cupfuls of sugar. After six minutes remove from the fire; add two teaspoonfuls of butter and one-half teaspoonful of vanilla. Beat this, too, until it is creamy, and pour it over the chocolate fudge already in the pan. Set it away to cool; when nearly hard cut it into squares.

Marshmallow Fudge Cakes. — Make a pot of chocolate fudge according to the directions in the first part of the previous recipe; but do not pour it into the pan as stated. Instead, grease a number of muffin pans, or line them with waxed papers. This last will be found to be the more satisfactory, because if the paper extends somewhat over the edge of the dish, the individual cakes can be lifted out and the paper simply peeled off, thus avoiding the risk of breaking the edges of the cakes by digging them out of the pan. Pour the fudge into these little pans to the depth of three-fourths of an inch. Into the centre of each cake press a marshmallow and allow the cakes to harden. Six or eight marshmallows dropped into the fudge during the heating process will make it richer and tastier. These fudge cakes are a most attractive form in which to serve fudge.

Pecan Kisses.—Combine the whites of six eggs with fifteen more than level tablespoonfuls of white sugar, and beat thoroughly until of sufficient consistency to stand alone. Beat lightly into this a small cupful of pecan kernels. Drop on greased brown paper and bake in a moderate oven. Take care not to burn.

Maple Puffs.—To one pound of maple sugar and one cupful of brown sugar add a cupful of water and boil without stirring until it reaches the firm ball stage. Cut one dozen marshmallows into pieces, and add them to the mixture in the saucepan, which had been removed from the fire; cover and let stand for five minutes. Mix the syrup well again, and pour slowly over the well-beaten whites of two eggs. Beat the mixture all the time, and when it begins to harden so that if will hold its shape, stir into it one-half cupful of candied cherries cut fine, one cupful of chopped English walnuts, and one-half cupful of candied pineapple. Mold into small cakes and lay on waxed paper; then place a cherry on top of each, and set away to get hard.

Candied Nuts.—Into a saucepan put one cup of brown sugar, one-third cup of corn syrup, one teaspoonful of vinegar, one teaspoonful of glycerine and one-half cupful of water. Boil without stirring until it is brittle, when put into ice-water; then remove from the fire and let stand for three minutes until the syrup ceases to boil. Place the nuts to be candied, carefully shelled, on a shallow, buttered pan; pour the syrup over them, and set the nuts away to cool.

Nut Bars. — Prepare nuts of any kind—almonds, walnuts, peanuts, etc.—by removing the inner skins and chopping them. Spread the nuts evenly in a broad, shallow pan, the sides and bottom of which have been greased with fresh butter. In another pot mix one pound of granulated sugar with half a cupful of water; add a pinch of cream of tartar, and boil without stirring until the mixture is thick without being very brittle. Pour this syrup over the chopped nuts and set the candy in a cool place to get hard. When it begins to get stiff, cut it into bars with a sharp, greased knife. If allowed to stand for a few days, the candy will become soft and acquire a delicious flavor.

Christmas Morning.

Before the wintry sun is up,
Oh, what a racket greets my ears,
The din is surely loud enough
To wake the folks of other spheres.
The trumpets toot, the dollies squeak
The woolly lambs in chorus bleat,
The baby locomotives chug,
The rat-tatoo the drumsticks beat,
For this is Christmas morning.

A toy piano tinkles out
A tiny, teeny-weeny tune,
So faint and sweet it might be played
Away up in the silver moon.
The air with merry laughter rings,
And shrieks of glee, and whoops of joy,
And happy gurgles of delight
From rosy, romping girl and boy,
For this is Christmas morning.

Wee Jimmy sports a soldier suit,
And Johnny has a wagon red,
And Susie got a camera,
And Bruce and Bobby each a sled,
And Tom in Fringe and feathers gay,
Just like an Indian chief appears,
And mother hugs them every one,
And murmurs "Bless the little dears!"
For this is Christmas morning.

Why We Decorate at Christmas.

Why do we decorate at Christmas?
Why the gifts on the Christmas tree?
Why the holly about the walls and the laurel over the pictures? Why, above all and the centre of all, those green and living growths, the mistletoe boughs?

Christmas seized upon these things for the celebration of the festival because of the power that held them green, that kept them alive, that preserved in them the beauty of life, notwithstanding the snow and sleet, the wind and chilling rain and the withering blast.

It is the spirit of these living growths that appeal to use when all the rest of inanimate nature appears to be sleeping under the mantle of winter.

The ancient Druids believed that spirits lived in the holly, the laurel, the bay, and the great green trees that formed the walls and living arches of their temples. They took the branches within their dwelling, believing that the spirits would follow, and there exercise their protecting care.

Of these spirits they believed none to be more powerful or capable of bringing greater blessing than those of the mistletoe.

These beliefs have gone from the world, but we cling to the emblems of them, and rejoice amid them at the Christmas celebrations.

Christmas Don'ts for All.

Of course we all want to be happy during the festive season, and if we bear the following "don'ts" in mind we should find them very helpful in enabling us to attain that end.

Don't, for example, give a gift as an "investment."

Don't give with the expectation of return.

Don't give a Christmas present grudgingly.

Don't figure out what So-and-So is going to give you.

Don't deposit a gift in a bank of gratitude and expect 20 per cent. interest on it all the year round.

Don't omit the children's toys.

Don't buy more than you can pay for.

Don't go from home on Christmas Day.

And don't forget to all be pleasant.

Mistletoe Means Marriage.

Once more we are in the midst of the festive season. For lovers, Christmastide is a time of no small moment, for it is tolerably safe to say that far more questions are popped at Christmas than at any other time in all the year.

As clergymen can testify, for a month after Christmas there are more banns of marriage published than in any other two months of the year, and they will probably add, with a genial smile, that it must be due to the benign influence of the mistletoe. After all, it's only natural that a young fellow, kissing a pretty girl for the first time at Christmas, should make up his mind to possess her permanently, so that he can repeat his osculatory performance whenever he chooses.

Mistletoe, it will thus be seen, is responsible for a good many marriages in spring.

Marcia's Xmas Money

It was some time about the middle of November that Marcia began carrying bundles for Miss Savitt. To be exact, it was just six weeks before Christmas, counting back from the Saturday night when Marcia went to her purse to put in another note and counted five other nice, new, crisp $1 bills. She hugged herself, gurgled with laughter and then buried her face in the pillow so that her mother, sitting in the next room, could not hear.

It came about this way: Marcia's mother had come to town with Marcia, Bobbie, the baby and a firm conviction that all she had to do in order to support her family would be to write the pretty stories that the Cokesville Chronicle had always accepted and printed with "thanks," but without other compensation. Marcia, Bobbie, and the baby were still here, but the conviction had fled forever some six months before, and Marcia's mother was putting in fine stitching at so much a yard for Miss Savitt on the floor below, who had all the work she could do and more. Times were pretty hard with the third-floor front, and Marcia's mother didn't get all the work she could do by any means.

Marcia still went to school, and it was in the afternoons that she carried the work home for Miss Savitt, earning her dollar a week with the happiest heart and most willing hands in the world. She had decided what to do with the $6 that would be on hand by Christmas. Of course, she would like to give her mother a sewing machine, but that was out of the question, so she compromised on a silver tea spoon marked on the back with the magical word "sterling." Bobbie was to have a sled and a pair of rubber boots, and the baby—the dear baby who had been so ill that she made them all think she was what Miss Savitt called "going"—the baby should have the biggest doll that could be bought—for the money.

All the remainder should go for the Christmas dinner, and after that she would begin to save up for another time. Everything was planned; nothing could happen to make anything different. Marcia was ten years old! So it came to be Saturday night, with Marcia gloating over her wealth. She raised her head from the pillow, stifling her laughter, and as she did so she heard a sound—a sob—from the next room. She knew at once what it was!

And then she remembered that her father had died a year ago, soon after Christmas. Marcia had been so happy lately she had forgotten.

She hastily crowded the money back into her little purse and ran into the other room. Marcia's mother was crying very softly, and on the table near were three pieces of paper—bills. Marcia knew what they were, although she was but ten. Marcia's mother hurriedly dried her eyes when Marcia came in and said it didn't matter; she felt sad to think she could not give her little children a merry Christmas; and she quickly took the bits of paper lying near and put them in a drawer. But one bit fell to the floor; and Marcia, picking it up, could not but see the words she had been saying to herself over and over again, written plainly on it, "six dollars." Marcia's mother spoke to her of many things, so now she told her about that "six dollars" written on the paper, and Marcia learned that it was the amount due the physician who had attended baby, and had, so Miss Savitt said, "brought him to" when Marcia's mother thought he would die.

Marcia clutched the paper with a little pain in her heart that every moment kept growing sharper and sharper, and after a while, when her mother and Bobbie and the baby were looking at a picture book, she slipped from the room, put on hat and jacket and ran—you can't turn back so easily when you run—the five blocks between her home and that of Doctor Smith.

When once she was in the doctor's presence she was brave enough. She paid the $6, saw him receipt the bill, and turned to leave the office. And then such an awful thing happened. The thought, with all its weight of woe came over her that it was all gone—silver spoon, sled, dinner, everything—and she burst into tears.

She never knew how it happened, but in a few minutes she was telling the doctor all about it—the sewing machine and the other two bills and everything. Then the doctor offered to give the money back, but looked pleased when she refused it; and she started home, still a very sad but a much happier little girl than when she came.

Such a queer thing happened on Christmas eve! For a wagon drew up and brought such wonderful things to Marcia's home! A sewing machine, in the drawer of which was a $20 gold piece and a silver spoon marked "sterling" for Marcia's mother, a sled and rubber boots for Bobbie, a big, a magnificent doll for baby! And there was a wonderful book of fairy tales, with such pictures as she had never seen before. And in this book was written these words, "For Marcia, a little girl who thought of others."

Merry Christmas.

Merry Christmas, Merry Christmas,
Greets you at the door,
Merry Christmas, Merry Christmas,
Ere you step the threshold o'er.

Laughing voices, merry faces,
Greet you one by one,
They know, each and all their places,
'Ere they start the Christmas fun.

Candles sparkling brightly, lightly,
On the Christmas tree,
Merry Christmas, Merry Christmas,
Are the cries that come to me.

Now they play about the firelight,
Hark what can it be?
It is surely dear old Santa
Bringing gifts for you and me.

Merry Christmas, Merry Christmas,
They call, one by one,
Won't you, Santa, come and join us
'Ere we start the Christmas fun?

"See that man across the street? He landed in this town ten years ago without a penny in his pocket." "And now?" "Now he owes me $1,000."

Christmas Cakes

White Fruit Cake.—Two cups of sugar sifted three times, three-quarters of a cup of butter. Work butter and sugar to a cream and add one-half a cupful of milk filled up with water, three and one-half cups of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, sifted three times. Stir thoroughly and add the beaten whites of five eggs. Flavor with almond.

Filling. Grind one-half cup each of raisins, figs, citron, and English walnuts, add some ground pineapple, a little of the juice. Boil two cups of sugar until it threads, and pour on the unbeaten whites of two eggs; beat until quite thick, then add the fruit; stir all together; in between layers and on top cover with the halves of English walnuts.

Royal Fruit Cake.—This is a large recipe making three large loaves. Can be kept for a year or longer. Five cupfuls of flour, one and one-half cupfuls each of sugar and butter, one-half cupful of milk, one cupful of molasses, one teaspoonful of soda, two teaspoonfuls each of allspice and cloves, two tablespoonfuls of cinnamon, five eggs, one nutmeg, two pounds of raisins, three pounds of currants, one and one-half pounds of citron; bake about one hour or longer in a slow oven.

Christmas Confection. — A new Christmas confection, delicious and quickly made, is made by cutting rich fruit cake thinly and dipping squares, triangles, or circles in melted sweet chocolate. This bonbon is a delightful "find" in the Christmas box.

A Recipe.

Take a quart of pure Good Will,
Flavor well with Sympathy;
Boil it on the fire till
It is full of bubbling Glee.
Season with a dash of Cheer,
Mixed with Love and Tenderness;
Cool off in an atmosphere
That is mostly kindliness.

Stick a dozen raisins in
Made of grapes from Laughter's vine,
And such fruit as you may win
In a purely Jocund line.
Make a batter from the cream
Of Good Spirits running high,
And you'll have a perfect dream
Of a Merry Christmas pie!

The Oldest Christmas Carol.

Christmas carols are as old as the Christmas era. The first Christmas carol was sung by the angels to the shepherds of Judea. They sang "Glory to God in the Highest, and on Earth Peace, Good Will Toward Men."

Some of the most beautiful Christmas carols appeared in the fifteenth, sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and had their home in France, Italy, and England. In those days it was the mark of a litterateur to have carol collections, for books were not as plentiful as they are now, and one of the most famous collectors was De Caurroy, of France, whose name comes down to us, in the writings of the day, more as a collector of carols than as a writer.

CHRISTMAS DAY.

Blithest day of Holy Year
When the Lord to men drew near;
Very Man for us was born,
Seeming of His glory shorn;
Did a human mother claim,
And a tender human name.

Mother blessed evermore,
Since the Son of God she bore;
Sacred name, henceforth to be Hailed by all with bended knee;
Jesus! Name of love supreme,
And of angels' praise the theme!

Let thy love a semblance take
Of that love for Jesu's sake;
Let the poor thy bounty share,
And the helpless feel thy care;
Greet thy friends with gifts since He Came the Gift Supreme to be.

Then thy best as tribute bring
To the altar of thy King,
Where in ceaseless mystery
He renews that Gift to thee,
And the life He did bestow
Yields its constant overflow.

FOR CHILDREN'S PARTIES.

Suggestions for the Entertainment of the Little Ones.

A child's love for a Christmas party is very touching. One Christmas gone, he lives in happy anticipation of the one to come. So never allow the Yuletide season to pass without giving at least one party for the children. It need not be an elaborate affair—just the simplest menu and entertainment will please, for children are not critical. This year let it be a "snowball party."

On circular pieces of white bristol board, touched with water-color paints to simulate snowballs, write the invitations. Children adore "dressing up," so make it a costume party. They can represent dolls, brownies, Teddy bears, clowns, fairies or any other character which happens to please their fancy.

At any shop where favors are sold cotton snowballs are purchasable in all sizes. These are inexpensive, but if you prefer they may be made at home. Attach these to strands of white baby ribbon of different lengths and with them form a shower of snowballs over the table. This is a simple matter, if you have a dome chandelier, for the snowballs can be suspended from a network of Christmas greens fitted under the dome. The top of the chandelier should be completely covered with Christmas decorations.

For the centrepieces form a large snowball of cotton and decorate it with holly and mistletoe. This should contain a favor for each small guest, wrapped in a cotton snowball and tied with white ribbon. Deck the candles with red shades shaped like Christmas bells, to add color to the table.

Serve the sandwiches tied in bundles with red ribbon, and ornament the cakes, ices, salad and candies in a Christmasy manner.

Entertain the children with games, dancing, or you might arrange for them to give a Christmas pantomime. It will take but little coaching to prepare this, and they will enjoy "acting" without words.

Just before they depart, have Kriss Kringle appear with a large bag filled with cotton or tissue paper snowballs, which is the signal for a snowball fight. This will prove a jolly ending to the children's Christmas party.

UNUSUAL DESSERTS.

Compote of Chestnuts. — Boil the chestnuts for eight minutes, remove the husks and skins, place in a saucepan ½ lb. of granulated sugar and a gill of water. When it comes to a boil; drop in the chestnuts and let them remain until they have absorbed all the syrup; take them out, arrange high on a glass dish, squeeze over them the juice of half a lemon, and sprinkle with granulated sugar. Serve when cold.

Macedoine of Fruits.— Set a jelly mould into a pail of rough ice and salt, and arrange the fruits according to fancy between layers of clear, well-sweetened jelly, flavored with some liquor, as noyeau or maraschino. If the jelly be poured into the mould an hour before it is required, the outside will be sufficiently frozen, and the inner part will be as firm as can be desired. When removed from the ice-pail, turn out the jelly on a glass dish, first dipping the mould into tepid water, which will loosen it immediately. The mould should be covered while in the ice.

Creole Cream.—Beat the yolks of six eggs with half a teacupful of powdered sugar; add a pint of rich milk. Set over the fire and stir until very hot, but not boiling; take off and let cool. Cut up ½ lb. citron. Ornament the sides of a mould with candied strawberries and leaves cut from thin sheets of lemon jelly. Stir two tablespoonfuls of melted gelatine into a pint of whipped cream; add to the custard with the chopped citron; pour into the mould and set on ice.

England was the first country to take any measures for the prevention or punishment of cruelty to animals.

In a private school a little girl was asked to define the word agriculture. "Agriculture? Agriculture?" she repeated, thoughtfully. "Why, agriculture is the society word for farming."

The Paisley Advocate

PAISLEY, DEC. 15th, 1915

Stick to the Farm or Take to the Trenches?

When addressing a food supply meeting a couple of months ago in England, Lord Selborne, President of the Board of Agriculture, said: "The third observation I wish to make is this, and if the press will be good enough to report it, you can have it printed and circulated. I say to the highest skilled men in agriculture, the foremen, the stockmen, the carters, the shepherds, the engine drivers, the thatchers and the blacksmiths, if you leave your present post to go into the army or navy, or into the munition factory, your motives may be good, but your judgment is wholly bad—(cheers)—you can perform a greater service to England to day by staying where you are than by going anywhere else."

This shows how the food question is viewed in Britain, when considered alongside of that of enlistment, and those Canadians may be excused who see it in the same light.

Huron County Council at its December session discussed the question of making a grant to assist recruiting in that county, but decided not to do so, on the grounds that as help is already scarce in the rural sections, it would not be in the interests of agricultural production or of the nation to take the young men from the farms and send them to the fighting line. Bruce County Council took the opposite course, making an appropriation of $1000 to promote the organization of a Bruce battalion.

Agricultural production has increased tremendously in Canada since the war began. Whether this may rightly be credited to the farmers' efforts in response to the appeal made for an assured supply of food for the Empire and her allies, or whether the big crop of 1915 is due merely to the bounteousness of nature, or yet whether it came from a combination of hard work and favorable conditions, cannot be stated off-hand, and it is hardly necessary to discuss the point.

It is somewhat doubtful, however, when we recall the stress laid upon the food problem only a short time ago, also the more recent action of our Government resorting to the process of commandeering a supply of wheat for the Imperial Government, whether the farmers should be upbraided because of the fact that not many of their class are responding to the call to arms. They continue to plod along behind the plow, still preferring to man the furrow rather than the trench, wear the yeoman's garb of tweed or dairy rather than don the khakiland wield the bayonet-tipped rifle or operate a machine gun.

The man, young or old, who is actively engaged in extracting from the soil the natural products that go to make up the food upon which the fighters and munition workers depend for subsistence are at least fulfilling a part in the great military fight for our liberties, and it is not for other men of the non-productive classes to point the way of patriotic duty without having first done their "bit." The chap who is not actually doing something that needs to be done should either change his occupation or keep mum on the subject of enlistment. Possibly, if many of those enthusiastic talkers showed a readiness to get out on the land and take a hand in the labor of growing food, more of the real farmers might see their way clear to enter the recruiting lists. The land must be worked, and who is to work it if all the young men eligible for the fighting line leave the farms? Men who can't fight might farm, but would they?

TEACHERS' SUPERANNUATION BILL

The general public, as well as school teachers, will be interested in the superannuation bill which comes up before the Ontario Legislature at the next session for its second and third readings. The bill was introduced at the close of last session and provides for the superannuation of all teachers who retire after forty years of service. The idea of the new legislation is to encourage permanency in the teaching profession. The chief objection from the teacher's standpoint is that they have to wait too long before the bounty comes, and all ratepayers will not take kindly towards contributing additional taxes for the additional support of teachers. Under the proposed bill the Government and the municipalities will contribute to finance the scheme. The teachers will contribute two per cent of their salaries, the Provincial Government a sum equal to two per cent of the salaries of all teachers in Ontario, and each corporation or school board employing teachers a sum equal to one per cent of the salaries of these teachers. The pension will be granted on a basis of one-sixtieth of the average salary for the last ten years of service multiplied by the total number of years of service, the maximum pension being limited to $1,000 and the minimum being fixed at $365 a year. A teacher who retired with forty years of service credited under the new pension scheme will receive four-sixth of the average salary for the years previous to retirement.

VIOLENT ATTACKS OF DYSPEPSIA

St. Jean de Matha, Jan. 27th, 1914.

"After suffering for a long time with Dyspepsia, I have been made well by "Fruit-a-tives." I suffered so much that at last I would not dare to eat for I was afraid of dying. Five years ago, I received samples of "Fruit-a-tives" and after taking them I felt relief. Then I sent for three boxes and I kept improving until I was well. I quickly regained my lost weight—and now I eat, sleep and digest well—in a word, I am fully recovered, thanks to 'Fruit-a-tives.'"

Subscribers Know Why it Should be $1.50

WE find that our subscribers are not averse to paying $1.50 for a weekly newspaper that provides them with the local news. In all branches of business there have been increases. Dozens of lines could be quoted to show the increase but the public are as conversant with these as the writer. The goods purchased in former days gave good wear and satisfaction. The purchasing price of a dollar was greater than it is to-day. Everything has advanced in price. Wages are higher, farm products bring more. Below are the Paisley market quotations taken from THE ADVOCATE of Dec. 16th, 1890 (25 years ago) and of Dec. 7th, 1915, which show exactly the difference in price of the necessaries of life that the printer has to buy from the dealers or the farmers:

	1890	1915
Potatoes, bushel	20c to 25c	60c to 70c
Beef, dressed, per cwt	$4 00	$13 00
Butter, lb	18c to 19c	35c to 37c
Eggs, doz	16c to 17c	37c to 38c
Flour, per cwt	$3 40	$3 50
Lard, lb	12½c	28c
Tallow, lb	3c	6c
Hogs, dressed, per cwt	$5 50	$11 75

In the face of all these increases the printer has stood up and accepted the advance not only in the commodities of life, but in materials that enter into the production of his paper, and tried to make ends meet. You know what it means to try and make a short belt meet. Well, that's what the printer has been doing. He sees failure ahead unless he increases the price of his paper. This he is going to do and he is optimistic enough to feel that his fellow townsmen and country friends will stand by him. We should all be happy and the one way to be happy is to try and make others happy.

Bruce Soldiers Everywhere

In a letter to a school-mate here, Pte Victor Smeaton, of the University Batt., Montreal, tells how he was astonished one day lately to hear a lusty soldier voice call for "Three cheers for Bruce" and seven men joined in vigorously. Victor later found the septette were the Geddes boys and Roy Thompson of Port Elgin, and other fellows from Kincardine, Lucknow and other places in this county, who are all in the University corps in Jacques Cartier's city. Whether the proposed Bruce Battalion can be raised or not, there sure is a battalion of Bruce men now at the front or in training.

Four Lives Lost in Fire

Mr. W. A. Mitchell, of Port Elgin, received a message from Plenty, Sask., telling that his mother Charles and three sons were burned to death in a fire that destroyed their home on Friday morning last. Mr. Mitchell had started the kitchen fire and gone out to the stable, and was called by his wife when the house was discovered to be burning. He succeeded in saving two of the children, and was in the building after the other three, but did not get out again. It is thought he fell and with the three boys was overcome with the smoke and heat. Mr. Mitchell was well known in Paisley, having made frequent business calls here as a gardener, and also as an exhibitor at the fall fair.

Red Cross Box Social and Entertainment

A choice short programme was rendered at the box social held on Tuesday night, which was heard with pleasure by the fair-sized audience. The numbers were solos by Miss Edna Carter and Mr. P. C. Ryan, also a duet by the same lady and gentleman; a recitation by Miss R Miller; a calisthenic drill by Miss Fisher's public school class, and selections by the orchestra. There were lunch boxes galore brought by the ladies, which were auctioned off at good prices by Mr. R. C. Pearce. The position of chairman was filled very efficiently by Mr. Hugh McKerracher. Proceeds amounted to $42.45.

The Bruce Battalion

Lt.-Col. Weir, a former officer of the 32nd Regt., has been commissioned to take charge of the organization of the 16th Overseas Battalion, to be recruited in Bruce county. We understand that there are 18 officers of the 32nd willing to enlist for overseas service, provided they are taken on the staff of the 16th. The majority of these would require to take an examination course to qualify fully, but are ready to do so during the period of training. Col Weir, however, has selected all his staff men who were formerly but are not now connected with the local regiment, and this has caused the home officers to feel that they are being treated without the consideration they deserve, especially after doing the preliminary work in connection with promoting the new battalion. It is hoped that the organization may be completed in a way that will establish harmony and good will among all interested in the launching of the new fighting corps from Bruce, and at the same time leave it efficiently officered.

Elderslie Socks Went to a Paisley Born Boy at the Front

A note enclosed with a pair of woollen socks sent to the soldiers by Miss Cassie Lewis, of Elderslie, brought the following reply, which so fully explains itself that no further explanation is required:

Nov 20th, 1915

DEAR MISS LEWIS—I wish to acknowledge the receipt of a pair of hand knitted socks with your name and address on, so that I take the liberty of thanking you. It certainly is a strange and most pleasant coincidence that it should fall to the lot of a Paisley boy. I was born in Paisley on the 5th of August, 1883. My father was John Stark, son of James Stark, of the Paisley City Mills, and I have all kinds of relations living there now, but they are not aware that I am at the front fighting for our king and country. I enlisted last December in Vancouver, B C., where my home is at present. We landed in England the end of May, and from there we came to France and Belgium, and I have now put over two months in the front line. Our life in the trenches is made as pleasant as could be by the many kindnesses our dear friends at home have sent out, and there is not anything more gratefully received than socks, for our feet are wet all the time, and a dry change is sure a great comfort. And now I must draw this to a close. Again thanking you for your kindness.

I remain, yours sincerely,
(Handsman) John H Stark,

Lower Rates for Parcels to Soldiers in France

The Hon. T. Chase Casgrain, Postmaster General of Canada, has been successful, as a result of negotiations entered into with the Imperial Postal Authorities, in effecting an arrangement with the British Government whereby parcels from Canada for Canadian soldiers in France and Flanders will be carried at the same rate of postage as applies to parcels from the United Kingdom for the expeditionary forces on the continent, that is, for parcels weighing up to three pounds, 24 cents, for parcels weighing over three pounds and not more than seven pounds 32 cents, for parcels weighing over seven pounds and not more than eleven pounds 38 cents.

This means a material reduction on the cost of parcels, and it is hoped it will be a source of satisfaction to the Canadian public. This reduction has been brought about by Canada foregoing all postal charges for the conveyance of these parcels in Canada and on the Atlantic.

The public are reminded, however, in accordance with the circular issued by the Department recently, that until further notice no parcel can be sent weighing over seven pounds.

COUNTY COUNCIL

The County Council of the County of Bruce met in the council chambers, Walkerton, on Tuesday, Dec 7th, as per adjournment. The warden was in the chair and all members present.

The December session of council is always "pay session," closing up the accounts for the year. This year an unusually large number of accounts were presented and the finance committee was kept busy, but under the able guidance of chairman Brown, of Chesley, kept up with its work and finished the list.

A letter was read from the treasurer of the Belgian Relief Fund warmly thanking the county for the assistance given this fund and showing how badly required it was.

The town of Seaforth wrote asking the council to join in a protest against the proposed act as to superannuation of teachers. The council did not think the act fair and agreed to protest against its being passed.

Officers of the 32nd Regt and Lt-Col Weir, who has been appointed to command the battalion to be raised in Bruce for overseas service, appeared before the council asking assistance in the recruiting of this battalion. Council gave a grant of $1000 and also recommended that all officers as far as possible should be Bruce county men.

The appointment of a gaol surgeon, made necessary by the death of the late Dr Sinclair, was taken up. There were five applicants—Drs Farwell, Hall, Parker, Sinclair and Stalker, all of Walkerton. Five votes were required to make the appointment, Drs Hall and Stalker on the fourth vote being tied. Dr Hall received another vote on the fifth and was declared elected.

The townships of Turnberry and Culross have issued a writ against the counties of Huron and Bruce to compel them to bridge a sinkhole on the county boundary between these townships. A committee from Bruce and one from Huron has visited the place and reported that all that was required was to clean out some ditches. The township say this will not do as the road there is sinking and draining will not prevent it. A committee was appointed to confer with a committee from Huron, if one appointed with power to act.

A by-law was passed for borrowing $57,000 on debentures to pay the grants made for patriotic purposes, the members thinking such payments might well be spread over ten years, the term of the by-law.

The question as to the payment of fees by outside pupils attending continuation classes, where the schools received the county grant, having pupils living in the county but outside the place where the school was should not have to pay any larger fees than pupils residing in that place, as the class was largely maintained by the government and county grants. The matter was allowed to stand for this year, but action along that line will probably be taken next year.

Mr Joynt, of Lucknow, raised the question as to the disposition of the bodies of inmates of the House of Refuge who die there. Under the act these may be claimed by the inspector and sent to the medical schools, unless claimed by relatives or friends within twenty-four hours after death. This Mr Joynt thought was not right. It was decided in such cases that the warden should claim all such bodies on behalf of the council and have them buried.

Mr Ballachey again brought up the assuming by the county of the Willow Creek bridge in Paisley. The committee appointed to see the bridge reported it was over the length at which the law requires a county to assume a bridge, and after considerable discussion the bridge was assumed.

An offer was received for the sale of some more land for purposes of the House of Refuge. Consideration thereof was deferred until the January session.

The council highly complimented Warden McCannel for the able manner in which he had discharged the onerous duties of his position in a difficult year. In reply the warden thanked the members for the courteous and able manner in which they had supported him, and for the business way in which they had looked after the many matters brought before them.

—Tara council is submitting a by-law to the ratepayers providing for the borrowing of $7,500 on debentures to meet the cost of an electrical plant and works for the transmission and distribution of power to be supplied from Hydro-Electric system.

—Owen Sound is to have a local option appeal vote, after all, as the antis presented their case before Justice Riddell at Osgoode Hall, Toronto, who rules that their petition for a repeal by-law is signed by a sufficient number of names to answer the requirements of the statutes, so the town council has agreed to submit the by-law.

—A circumstance which it is worth while to recall is that of the five Balkan States, the two that are fighting with the Allies—Serbia and Montenegro—are the only two that are ruled by native princes. The sovereigns of Greece, Bulgaria and Roumania belong to other races and owe their position largely to influences outside of the countries of which they are the monarchs. If the wishes of the majority of the people in each of the Balkan states were the first consideration, probably all of them would be with the Allies and against their traditional and virtual enemy, Turkey.

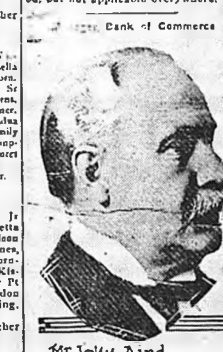
JAPANESE PROVERBS

It has been said that the Japanese are as apt and unique in their proverbs as they are in their works of art. What, for example, could be more appropriate to man in certain desperate circumstances than this: "Man may stand when he can no longer swim." "While the tongue works, the brain sleeps," is another saying of the Japanese, which expresses their contempt for loquacious persons. The Japanese are quick at repartee; their wit is keen and tempered, and they can often administer a perfect snub in terse form. By illustration of this there may be sited the following instance. There was being tried in a court a case involving the possession and ownership of a piece of property. The litigants were brothers. The holder, who was clearly not the rightful owner, had assaulted and ejected his brother and was protesting his right to defend his claim. The examining magistrate listened very patiently to him until he closed with the words, "Even a cur may bark at his own gate." Then the judge quaintly voiced the judgment, as if stating an abstract point of law: "A dog that has no gate bites at his own risk."



FOR ROUND SHOULDERS

Many Cures for this Trouble Suggested, None Perfected

Nobody, it is true, wants to be round-shouldered, unless it be some youth who needs only to be told that his self-consciousness will disappear if he will but look at the other people instead of imagining that they are looking at him. But, while it is as easy as it ought to be unnecessary to preach against the habit, the difficulty is to show how the evil may be overcome. Usually, when anything is wrong, the first step toward righting it is to discover and remove the cause. But, in the case of stooping shoulders, while the cause is probably to be found in our clothing, which hampers the body and continually burdens it with an unnatural weight, we can neither escape from the cause in general, nor from the particular form of it in the garb which our imperfect civilization prescribes.

Many, indeed, have been the methods suggested to overcome this habit. In the minds of some the secret is to keep the chin drawn in. This attitude, as anyone will see by trying it, produces a slight raising and rounding of the chest. Others would hold the shoulders squared back and the chest protruded. Either of those rules, if carried out, is likely to result in a strained posture. In some cases the effort to stand erect merely develops an awkward bend at the waist, actually pitching the body backward. A mechanical device for securing an erect posture is to carry a weight on the head. This is an excellent method, but not applicable everywhere.

Bank of Commerce

Sir John Aird.

General Manager of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, was born at Longueuil, P.Q., in 1865, educated at the Toronto Model School, and as a mere lad went into the banking profession. Previous to being appointed Assistant General Manager of the Bank of Commerce in 1911, Mr. Aird was superintendent of Western branches with headquarters at Winnipeg. He is regarded as a safe, conservative, and thoroughly well informed banker.

A Remarkable Boundary

The demarcation of the Alaska-Canada boundary from the St. Elias range straight north along the 141st meridian to the Arctic Ocean has been in progress since 1907, and is now completed. This undertaking was noisible for several reasons. No other modern boundary demarcation has extended into such high latitudes, and few boundaries of equal length anywhere in the world are so straight. The line follows the meridian without the slightest deviation, regardless of mountains, swamps, and forests. Wherever the boundary passes through timber and brush a 20-ft. clearing has been made. The boundary is 600 miles long, and is marked by about 200 monuments.

BAR GERMAN NAMES

Articles Would be Just as Useful if the German Names Was Removed

"I cannot speak the King's English in a place called a kneenal," was the reply which Father Bernard Vaughan made the other day to a request that he should address a meeting in a certain provincial town. Kneenal is, of course, an out-and-out German word, and it is difficult to see the necessity of retaining it as an adopted unit in our language. It is neither impressive nor euphonious. Hall or pavilion would be just as good and far more agreeable. As a matter of fact, kneenal is one of a number of unwanted, ugly German words that we ought to "sack" by immediate common consent. It is high time we had nothing German in our vocabularies.

What do we want with the word hinterland, for example? The Australian term, the back blocks, means the same thing, and it is British. Kindergarten is another Teutonic word which we should have nothing more to do with. The word means children's garden, and practically no kindergarten is that. Play-school would be a far truer description. A firm, concerted intimation from parents to the effect that unless the word was given up they would withdraw children would certainly kill it at once.

Another misnomer which we obstinately stick to is eau-de-Cologne. The first two words of the name are French, of course, and might be retained, but there is no reason why the German town of Cologne should be included in it. It is true that the scent was originally distilled at Cologne, but it is certain that none of it comes from there now-a-days. The British navy sees to that. Why not re-christen it eau-de-Paris, out of compliment to our splendid Allies the French? It would smell just as sweet by that name—sweeter to many of us.

We should also give up lager-beer—at any rate, by that name. Now that its export from Germany here has quite ceased there is no sort of excuse for calling this particular brew lager. Hock and hummel are two other liquids which should forthwith be renamed. Hock is really an abbreviation of Hochheim, the town where it was first chiefly made. Talking of that, calls to mind the "sausage dogs," as dachshunds are often flippantly called. Sausage-dog is scarcely a name likely to find a place in the dictionary or in polite society, but dachshund should certainly go. It is horribly German, and our dog experts could soon replace it. There seems to be little or no apology necessary for the demand that we should sack out-and-out German words from our language; but it may be pointed out that the French and Russians have already done so, and that one of the first acts of the war by the Germans was to boycott all British and French words and expressions for which they could find home-made substitutes.

The Planter's Daughter;

Or, The Queen of Belle River.

CHAPTER XXVII.

In the meanwhile, the object of his solicitude, Clement Sutherland, sat in a private parlor of the Planters' Hotel, in the village of C——, afraid to return home, with wild thoughts of flight darting through his oppressed distracted head! A victim to the lust of gold, he had served the devil too well to be deserted of him at the last hour.

Some months before, a most promising opportunity offered of making a great speculation by the investment of a considerable sum of money. He had neither cash nor credit; and all his estate was mortgaged to nearly its full value. There was one means of raising funds suggested to his mind but his soul shrank from it. He could anticipate his ward's majority by a few months, and borrow her signature only for a power of attorney and a deed of mortgage. And the money could be raised on her real estate, and the sum invested, and the profits secured. And then the mortgage could be released and destroyed before the forgery could be discovered and exposed.

He had never trained his moral strength by resisting slight temptations; and now that the temptation was a great one, he fell before it. He left the neighborhood of Cashmere for two weeks, and on his return laid before the usurer at C—— a power of attorney and a deed of mortgage, seemingly duly signed, witnessed and attested. Upon these the requisite funds were borrowed, embarked in the speculation, and lost!

And now the dread day of account had come, and he sat overwhelmed, unable to fly, afraid to go home. It was while he sat there, by turns stupefied and distracted, that the door was opened by a waiter, who announced:

"Judge Sutherland!"

He then retired as Mark walked in.

Clement Sutherland started to his feet, wild-looking, and gazed, without speaking, at his nephew.

"Sir, you are ill!" exclaimed the latter, anxiously.

Muttering some inaudible words between his white lips, the old man sank into his chair.

"I did not mean to—to wrong her!" said the old man, in a quivering tone.

"Wrong whom?" added Mark. "Sir, sir, you are really ill, and I must summon some assistance."

"No, no! you are mistaken. Bring no witnesses. It is—it is—a family affair. Now, I suppose you will have your revenge!"

Without more ado, Mark hastened to the door, with the purpose of sending for a physician. But the old man sprang, tottered after him, and clasped him around, staggered back, exclaiming: "You shall not! I'll have no witnesses. Oh, you're a lawyer!"

Mark Sutherland disengaged himself and sat his uncle down in a chair.

"There, look!" exclaimed the distracted culprit; "look! and consider what you will do. It will be a fine revenge, for old and new, to cast the white-haired man into a prison, won't it? Now, hark ye! No dishonor can crush me that will not touch you! Remember that!"

Mark Sutherland went to a sideboard, poured out a glass of water, and brought it to his uncle, who quaffed it off, and returned the empty glass, without a word. Mark Sutherland put down the glass, and took his seat beside the guilty man, saying calmly:

"Now, sir, it were best for all parties concerned, that you should put me in possession of the facts."

"And criminate myself! Ha! that's a lawyer's trick. But I'm collected. I'm not going to do it."

"Sir, you have already criminated yourself."

"Ha! you wish to trap me into doing so, so that you can take your revenge."

"Sir, you know well that no such mean spirit of vengeance will influence my action in this matter."

"You can't prosecute me—you can't disgrace me without dishonoring yourself. It would not do, you think, to have it said that Judge Sutherland's uncle was a felon."

"And why should not 'Judge Sutherland's uncle, or Judge Anyone's uncle, be called a felon, if he is a felon, as well as the poorest man's uncle alive? Family considerations never have influenced my conduct and never will do so. It will be from a motive that would also actuate us in sparing the veriest forsaken wretch alive!"

Clement Sutherland had sat with his elbows on the table, and his head bowed in his hands, his thin, withered features whitened and drawn in an by internal agony. But now he burst forth in a fit of fury, as ungovernable as it was unreasonable.

"And now, what do you propose to do?"

"I shall return home to-morrow, and take counsel with Rosalie."

"Take counsel with her!" exclaimed the old man, in alarm.

"Be at ease, sir. She had a voice in this matter. It is her name that has been used—her property that is lost. If it were my own affair, still I should consult her before taking any important step!"

"What will become of us?—of India! My child! my child! that your high head should be bowed with shame!"

"I can answer for Rosalie's noble heart. You are safe from all punishment from her. And now let us part at once. You had better return to Cashmere, where your family must be anxiously awaiting you."

"And where will you stay?"

"To-night I shall go on board the steamer Victress, which will leave for the Upper Mississippi to-morrow."

Suddenly the old man lifted up his head, and showed a countenance brightened with hope. He grasped the arm of his nephew, exclaiming:

"Oh! Mark, I have found the means by which family honor and Rosalie's fortune both may be saved. Rosalie need not deny her signature; that will protect me, and save family honor. But the signature was written before she came of age; therefore, the deeds are null and void and the usurer cannot foreclose the mortgage, or recover his money. So you see that I can—I mean family honor—can be saved, and Rosalie lose nothing either."

An involuntary expression of scorn and loathing flashed from Mark Sutherland's fine Roman face for a moment; and then, composing himself, he replied, coolly:

"No, sir; it you are saved, it must be at our own proper cost and loss."

And so they parted.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Mark Sutherland went on board the Victress, and betook himself to the solitude of the forsaken hurricane deck, there to walk, to reflect upon the sinfulness, the danger, of an ungoverned lust of gold. The hurricane deck was lonely, and there he paced up and down, wrapped in mournful thoughts, until the arrival of a noisy set. Then he went below and sought his berth.

Early in the morning he arose from a sleepless couch. Mark fixed himself in a favorable position for watching the receding wharf of what might be called his native village, when the figure of a fat man came running desperately toward the wharf. The boat arrested her motions, the plank was thrown out, and Uncle Billy followed by a man with his trunk and portmanteau, stepped on board. Panting and blowing, he hastened up to Mr. Sutherland, exclaiming, "Ah, dear boy! I liked to have missed you. Wouldn't have lost you for the world. Stick to you as long as I live, Mark. Whew-ew! Only heard this morning from Clement that you were going by the Victress! Running ain't good for me. Dangerous!" and shaking his nephew's hand, and wiping his own rosy face, Mr. Rolling sat down, and began to fan himself.

It was a slow voyage up the river, and on the afternoon of the twelfth day the steamer arived at the wharf of Shelton. Mark Sutherland wished, if possible, to get rid of his troublesome traveling companion for a few hours, while he could go home quietly, and have an uninterrupted meeting and talk with his dear Rosalie.

So, leaving all their baggage in the care of the clerk of the boat, Mark drew Billy's fat arm within his own, and conducted him to Colonel Garner's hotel. Here he ordered a luncheon while Uncle Billy stretched his lazy length upon the lounge, Mr. Sutherland said:

"Uncle Billy, excuse me, and make yourself comfortable, while I run down to Rosalie and prepare her for your arrival."

"Certainly! The child always was fond of me, and it might give her too much of a shock after so long a separation!"

"Is there anything else I can order for you?"

"Eh? No, nothing; I am much obliged to you."

"I will come and fetch you at teatime."

"Break my arrival to your wife cautiously, do you hear?"

"I shall be careful not to endanger Rosalie's life."

With a sigh of profound satisfaction, Uncle Billy arose and sat down in the easy chair and drew the table toward him.

We will leave Uncle Billy and follow Mark Sutherland to his "sweet home."

CHAPTER XXIX.

On the outskirts of the town, embosomed in a grove of trees, stood Rose Cottage, the pleasant home of the Sutherlands.

The grounds were unpretending; behind the house a kitchen-garden and young orchard; in front and at the sides a spacious yard, where single great forest trees were left standing, with rural seats fixed under their shade.

Mark Sutherland approached this sweet home. Every care and sorrow dropped from his spirit as he opened the little wicket-gate that separated his garden of Eden from the wilderness. He walked on through the shaded yard up to the piazza, and through the front door into the hall. Here two doors, opposite each other, opened—one into their parlor and dining-room, and the other into the school and class-room. He paused a moment and listened. The school was not yet dismissed.

He opened the door and entered.

Surely, there never was a schoolroom so pleasant, from which the aspect of restraint, and irksomeness, was so completely banished, as there certainly never was a teacher so lovely and so beloved. It was a spacious, airy apartment, lighted with many windows, shaded at a little distance by the rose-wreathed pillars and eaves of the piazza.

The young girls and children looked cheery. They left their seats and spoke to each other without infringing any rule, but all was done quietly and gracefully, as under the influence of a beloved mistress.

On a platform raised but one step above the floor, sat the young schoolmistress, scarcely turned twenty-one, and with the loveliest and most delicate form.

"My dearest Rose, you are so much better than when I went away," said Mark, looking fondly at her.

"I am better," replied Rosalie, smiling round upon her girls, several of whom left their seats and came to welcome Mr. Sutherland.

"Come in the parlor, and let's sit down there and talk—I have so many things to tell you," said Rosalie. Gently withdrawing herself, she led the way to the parlor.

But, first, he made her recline upon the lounge and rest, while he drew the chair up and sat by her side.

And there she lay, with her sweet, spiritual face, white as her drapery, except where all the color had concentrated in a circumscribed fiery spot in either cheek.

He sat watching her, and trying to feel and look happy, yet, perceiving that he had mistaken fever for healthful bloom.

"My love, you work too hard; that school is hurting your health?"

"No, dear Mark, believe me, it keeps me up."

"It exhausts you, my love—indeed, it must be closed."

"Not for the world would I close that school, dear Mark. Those girls are my children; and not only must I cultivate their intellects, but in every young, receptive heart I must sow good seed, that will bring forth fruit long after I am in——"

She paused suddenly, in embarrassment.

"What do you mean, Rosalie?" he asked.

"Dearest Mark, a faithful teacher, called to the work, may not abandon her post. Consider how mighty an instrument of good is set in motion by teaching aright one little child, and I faithfully try to teach forty. While I live, let me sow the good seed that it may bring forth good fruit when I am——"

There was a pause; he held her hand fondly.

"Dearest Mark, you look so careworn. Have you had much trouble in settling our business?"

He raised his head, and looked at her sweet, wan face. So he answered that Mr. Clement Sutherland was not yet prepared to give an account of his trust.

Rosalie arose and was sliding away.

"Where are you going?" asked Mark.

"To order tea, of course," she answered.

"Stop, Rosalie, I have got something to tell you."

And Rosalie sat down again; and Mark related his meeting with Mr. Rolling, and the manner in which that disinterested gentleman had thrust himself upon him for life.

"And where have you left him now?"

"At Colonel Garner's. I feel annoyed that you should be troubled with this old man."

"Bless your kind heart, dear Mark, I have not the shadow of an objection to his coming. Uncle Billy always was rather a cheerful object to me—such a neat, clean, dainty, self-satisfied, old gentleman! We can put him in the other front room upstairs."

"But to be burdened with him forever, Rose! He thinks he is doing us a mighty benefit!"

"Well let him think so if it makes him happy. I shall be very glad to make the old man contented!"

"Oh, yes; he says you're very fond of him, and begged me not to break his arrival abruptly."

Rosalie laughed outright.

ARMY DESERTIONS IN JAPAN.

Many Commit Suicide Rather Than Face Courtmartial.

The frequency of army desertion, as well as suicide of some of the deserters, is causing some concern among the Japanese military authorities. Statistics show that during last year there were 956 cases of desertion, of which 93 per cent. were common soldiers. Tokio leads other cities with 184 cases, while there were 112 cases at Osaka. Out of the total, 258 soldiers were brought before the military court and punished, while 698 deserters voluntarily surrendered before the three days' grace had expired.

The increase of suicide among deserters is believed to be due to the reduction of days of grace during the war from six to three days, the deserter sometimes preferring to kill himself than face the shame of courtmartial. Deserters who surrender before the three days expire are restored to the service with a light admonition. If they delay their return they become fugitives and are peremptorily punished on their arrest by the military court.

To the Man Higher Up.

Do you ever stop to think
As your pen dips in the ink
Which will separate some fellow from his job,
What an awful thing 'twill be
When your letter he shall see—
How his anxious heart will palpitate and throb?

How about the little tot—
Do you think of it or not?
And the wife depending on him for her bread;
And does something seem to say
That they need his little pay?
Does such a thought e'er travel through your head?

Do you think of him I wonder—
Of the man who's serving under,
Whose destiny you hold in your right hand?
Is your thought upon him then,
As you dip in ink your pen
Which will cast him out upon this frigid land?

Is he old and grey and bent?
Could he never save a cent
That would help to keep his little family now?
Was he lucky, just like you?
Is he honest, brave and true?
And did you take the word of Sand-So?

Does it ever seem to you,
That just what he's going through
May be meted out to you some day in kind?
Is your love for self-alone?
Is your heart as hard as stone?
Do you ever have your fellow-man in mind?

Do you ever, in despair,
Kneel down and say a prayer?
Or, do you never, never think of God at all?
He has prospered you, old boy,
Gave you health and wealth and joy;
So be careful when the axe you must let fall.

PRACTICAL FARMING

Calf Diphtheria.

Calf diphtheria is due to a specific infection, and is always a serious matter. The trouble may appear with calves from three to five days old. Such calves refuse to drink milk or suck. They show more or less discharge of saliva from the mouth. These patches gradually develop into ulcers covered with a dead, granular or cheesy mass, which does not peel easily from the raw surface underneath. There is considerable rise of temperature and an offensive odor from the mouth. The trouble may easily extend to neighboring parts, to the lining membrane of the nose, and then there appears a yellowish discharge. In some cases the lining membrane of the digestive tract is similarly affected and then there is tendency to diarrhœa. Little pigs show similar symptoms.

So far as now known the germ is a normal inhabitant of the intestines of healthy hogs and cattle and probably always virulent. When the disease is prevalent, the virus is, of course, scattered everywhere. Very young animals are most easily and most seriously affected, but cases have been reported in calves and pigs six or eight months old, and even occasionally in adult cattle and adult hogs.

The sores may be cleaned with two per cent. creolin in warm water, and then treated with Lugol's solution, applied twice a day to the ulcers. Permanganate of potash may also be used, two ounces to each gallon of water; made up fresh each time, as the mixture cannot be kept from day to day. Either treatment should be given to valuable animals about twice a day for from four to six days.

Frequent and thorough disinfection of calf-pens and calf-yards is one of the first essentials in management.

Unsafe Lanterns.

The season of shortened daylight brings its own peculiar fire dangers. One of these is the use of the lantern about farm buildings. Of recent years, owing to competition, a low-priced lantern, which is a serious fire menace, has been placed upon the market. Instead of being securely screwed on the oil reservoir, the burner is simply slipped on, with the result that if the lantern is upset, the burner comes off and the oil is allowed to run out upon the lighted wick. The result is either an explosion or a serious blaze and unless speedily checked, damage to life and property.

Poultry and Fruit.

If the hens have the run of an orchard they will not render as good service in protecting the trees from injurious insects as they will if confined in yards around the trees. While the orchard should be utilized, it gives much opportunity to the fowls to work over a large surface, which may to a certain extent lessen their vigilance around the trees. The old maxim is "Bring your chickens to your tree, keep them there, and they will destroy more insects than in any other way." The suggestion is a good one if not inflicting extra expense for fencing, but it is possible that some kind of movable fence should answer the purpose, as the fowls need not be confined except early in the season.

Pride in the Country.

We hear the term "civic pride" in the city. It applies just as much to the country resident. It means the pride that causes you to keep your premises clean and sightly and presentable to the stranger or passerby. And then you yourself might get some pleasure out of a well-kept farm.

Measured by the common standard, keeping your farm tidy actually adds dollars to its value and to the value of the products you have for sale. Let's clean up and stop breeding trouble on our farms.

LOOKING OLD TOO SOON

The Condition of Too Many Women and Too Many Girls.

Too many women and too many girls look old long before they should. Their faces become pale and drawn; wrinkles appear and their eyes lack brightness. Can this be wondered at when they so frequently have headaches, backaches and a general feeling of wretchedness and weakness? In most cases it is the blood that is to blame. From one cause or another the blood has become thin and watery, and it is a fact that anaemia (bloodlessness) more than any other cause, gives women this prematurely aged appearance. It is important that the blood supply of girls and women be regularly replenished—important not only on the score of looks, but to restore robust health, which is of greater value. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make new blood and restore the system shattered by overwork or worry. These pills give a glow of health to pale faces and make tired, weary women and girls feel bright and happy. With Dr. Williams' Pink Pills at hand there is no need for any woman or any girl to look ill or feel ill. Mrs. J. McDonald, jr., Hay, Ont., says: "I honestly believe Dr. Williams' Pink Pills saved my life. Some years ago I had anaemia, and as I did not realize the seriousness of the trouble I soon became a complete wreck. I got so weak I could hardly walk. I neither ate nor slept well, and could not go upstairs without stopping to rest. At times I had an almost unbearable pain in my back, and would have to remain in bed. I suffered almost constantly from a dull headache, and when creeping if I would stoop to pick up anything I would get so dizzy that I would have to catch hold of something to keep from falling. At times my heart would beat so fast that I would have a smothering sensation. My eyes were sunken and my hands and limbs would be swollen in the mornings. I tried several kinds of medicines without benefit, and my friends thought I would not recover. Then I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and before long could see and feel that they were helping me. I gladly continued the use of the pills until I was completely cured, and I cannot say enough in their praise, and I strongly recommend them to all run-down girls and women."

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills from any dealer in medicines or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A WELL OF TITLES.

Many Novelists Draw Titles for Their Books From the Bible.

The Bible has been called a well of English, but novelists have found it a well of good titles, upon which they can draw without stint. Mr. Hall Caine makes good use of it with "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," "The Prodigal Son," and "The Scapegoat"; Marie Corelli culls "Wormwood" and "Barabbas"; Miss Braddon "One Thing Needful" and "Thou Art the Man."

The late Walter Besant gets "Children of Gibeon" from the same inexhaustible supply, as well as "The Fourth Generation." The author of "John Halifax, Gentleman" has a novel entitled "A Life for a Life"; Joseph Hocking has one "All Men are Liars"; Seton Merriman, "The Tents of Kedar"; David Lyall, "The Corner Stone"; E. M. Jameson, "A House Divided"; and "Rita," "A Woman of Somaria."

"Joseph's Coat" is a memorable novel, and so is Marion Crawford's "Whosoever Shall Offend." William Le Queux has a novel called "As We Forgive Them," and Thomas Hardy names another "The Laodicean." Older readers recall Whyte Melville's "Black but Comely"; and William Black's "Daughter of Heth" is a minor classic.

Andrew Balfour has written "Vengeance is Mine" and Blundelle-Burton "The House of Bondage" and "The Sword of Gideon," two fine titles. L. G. Moberley has "In the Balances," Charles Marriott "The House on the Sand," and Mrs. Coulson Kernahan "An Unwise Virgin" and "The Graven Image."

Harold Begbie is fond of Biblical titles. Among others are "Tables of Stone" and "In the Hands of the Potter." Richard Bagot uses "The Just and the Unjust," and one of the most popular novels of the day is "The Way of an Eagle."

In fact, this page might be filled with case with Biblical titles of popular novels, and it would be a good exercise for a winter evening, not only to spot the Bible titles in a library catalogue, but also to see how many can be actually placed. Where, for instance, does "The Way of an Eagle" come? One might do worse than search Proverbs, a perfect storehouse of splendid titles, to go no further.—London Answers.

The orange was originally a pear-shaped fruit about the size of the common wild cherry. Its evolution is believed by naturalists to be due to 1,200 years of cultivation.

The women of Mexico use fireflies as jewels. They tie them in little gauze bags and put them in their hair or their clothing. Then, until they require them again, they keep them in little wire cages and feed them on scraps of sugar cane.

Cotton grows best in low coastal land in tropical latitudes. It is probably a native of tropical Asia, and certainly two of the most important cotton products take their names from Asiatic towns—muslin from Mosul and calico from Calicut. It requires plenty of moisture and salt.

A peculiarity of deaf cats is that they seem to have a great sense of feeling in their feet pads. It is almost an impossibility for a heavy animal to approach a deaf cat from behind without giving it warning, and this may be attributed to the extreme sensitiveness of the cat's feet recording the slightest tremor of the ground.

A FRIENDLY GROCER

Dropped an Valuable Hint.

"For about eight years," writes a lady, "I suffered from nervousness—part of the time down in bed.

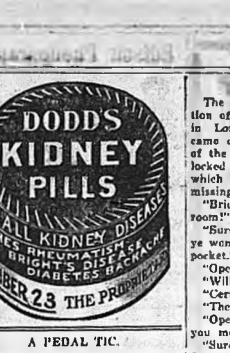
"Sometimes I would get numb, and it would be almost impossible for me to speak. At other times I would have severe bilious attacks, and my heart would flutter painfully when I would walk fast or sweep.

"I have taken enough medicine to start a small drug store, but without permanent benefit. One evening our grocer was asking my husband how I was, and urged that I quit coffee and use Postum, so he brought home a package, and I made it according to directions, and we were both delighted with it. We quit coffee altogether and used only Postum." (Tea produces about the same effects as coffee, because they both contain the drugs caffeine and tannin.)

"I began to get better, and in a month's time looked like another person. The color came back to my cheeks, I began to sleep well, my appetite was good, and I commenced to take on flesh and become interested in everything about the house.

"Finally, I was able to do all my own work without the least sign of my old trouble." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

Postum comes in two forms:



Postum Cereal— the original form —must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—a soluble powder —dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

A PEDAL TIC.

How Twitching of the Foot Unbalances the Mind.

When a foot twitches without apparent cause, automatically as it were, the doctors call it a pedal tic. Such a condition is not serious, but it is annoying, and soon gets on the nerves of the sufferer. Dr. Gustav F. Boehme of England reports a case of more than the usual interest, and its cure by psychanalysis.

A certain J. S., 29 years old, a clerk, had suffered for four years from a twitching of the right foot when at rest. Sometimes his left foot also twitched. He would have spasms of foot-twitching when in bed, when seated, when walking. His feet seemed to go beyond his control and he would stagger as if drunk. Otherwise he was well, and there was nothing in his family history that shed light upon his condition.

Dr. Boehme recognized that there was nothing organically wrong with him, so he began studying his "subconscious reflexes."

Dr. Boehme explained the twitching to J. S., saying that most men when seated cross one leg over the other and tend to swing the suspended foot. This is generally the right foot. When mentally perturbed the swinging becomes more pronounced. When J. S. returned to the unsatisfactory environment of his home and sat down to read, "his thoughts would wander, his worries would crowd into his consciousness, and the foot-twitching, at first voluntarily, would begin. Gradually, subconsciously, the tic gained the ascendancy."

Dr. Boehme described this condition to his patient, improved his general hygiene, and made him take long evening walks with cheerful friends. His condition improved within three days, and all twitchings had ceased after three weeks. J. S. declared he had no fear of a recurrence, but Dr. Boehme is not sure about this, saying it depends upon the clearness with which the patient has interpreted the symptoms.

WHO IS DR. JACKSON?

For years he taught food chemistry, dietetics, and diseases of the digestive tract in one of the large medical schools of the continent. In his extensive experience in free clinics he worked out the formula for Dr. Jackson's Roman Meal, a compound of whole wheat and rye, with deodorized flaxseed and bran. It nourishes better than meat, prevents indigestion and positively relieves constipation or "money back." Ask your doctor. At all grocers, 10 and 25 cents. HOW EXPLOSIONS KILL.

Concussion Bursts the Blood Vessels and Arteries.

It will be recalled that on the morrow of the battle of the Marne return combatants related strange stories of the aspect of certain German unwounded corpses. Death had been so instantaneous that the bodies remained in a life-like posture, some shouldering a rifle, other pipe in mouth. In a communication made to the Academy of Medicine M. Reno Arnoux asserts that the phenomena were due to the efficacy of the French explosives. Within a fifteen yards' radius of the point where the shell explodes the displacement of the air is so intense as to destroy the equilibrium of pressure on the interior and exterior of the human body. The gas contained in the blood is thus liberated, causes a distension of the blood vessels and arteries, and, ultimately bursting these organs, induces sudden death. This argument is confirmed by the state of the bodies, which often showed the heart and liver greatly distended and numerous internal hemorrhages.

According to Orders.

The following unusual interpretation of a common command appears in London Tit-Bits. The mistress came downstairs and tried the door of the sitting room, only to find it locked against her, while the key, which was usually in the lock, was missing.

"Bridget, I can't get into the sitting room!" she cried.

"Sure, it's myself knows that; and ye won't, fur I hev the kay in me pocket."

"Open the door immediately!"

"Will yez go in if I do?"

"Certainly I will."

"Then yez won't get the kay."

"Open the door, I say! What do you mean?"

"Sure, it's by your own orders. Just yesterday ye said, 'Don't let me come downstairs in the morning and see any dust on the sitting room furniture.' So I just puts the kay in me pocket, and says I, 'Then she shan't!'"

Throw Away Your Eye-Glasses!

A Free Prescription

You Can Have Filled and Use at Home

Do you wear glasses? Are you a victim of eye-strain or other eye-weaknesses? If so, you will be glad to know that there is real hope for you. Many whose eyes were failing say they have had their eyes restored through the principle of this wonderful free prescription. One man says, after trying it: "I was almost blind; could not see to read at all. Now I can read everything without any glasses and my eyes do not water any more. At night they would pain dreadfully; now they feel fine all the time. It was like a miracle to me." A lady who used it says: "The atmosphere seemed hazy with or without glasses, but after using this prescription for fifteen days everything seems clear. I can even read fine print without glasses." It is believed that thousands who wear glasses can now discard them in a reasonable time, and multitudes more will be able to strengthen their eyes so as to be spared the trouble and expense of ever getting glasses. Eye troubles of many descriptions may be wonderfully benefited by following the simple rules. Here is the prescription: Go to any active drug store and get a bottle of Bon-Opto. Drop one or two drops into each eye two to four times daily. You should notice your eyes clear up remarkably right from the start, and inflammation will quickly disappear. If your eyes are bothering you, even a little, take steps to save them now, before it is too late. Many people going blind might have been saved if they had cared for their eyes in time. The Vulcan Drug Co., of Toronto, will fill the above prescription by mail, if your druggist cannot.

A Soft Answer.

The sergeant was very crusty, and, of course, had to preserve his dignity, but as he was walking along the trench he suddenly slipped, and plumped right down into the middle of the slush of water and mud. None of the men near him could resist a smile, but when he picked himself up he turned on Malone.

"Well, what are you standing there looking like a jackass for? Do you see anything funny?" he bawled.

"No, sargint," returned Malone, "but, begorra, shure, and a' was just thinkin' how funny it would have been if it had been somebody forby yourself."

Shaping the Tree.

The tendency of trees is to grow from the uppermost buds, so if it is desirable to keep the tree low, the new growth should be headed back each year. Every kind and every variety has a characteristic growth; the style of pruning, therefore, must conform to the habit of the tree.

ONTARIO'S NEW WEALTH OF WHITE COAL

A tonnage of 13,593,574 represents the total output of Canada's coal fields in 1914. A tonnage of 6,000,000 represents the coal that would be consumed in the production of the 600,000 horsepower that Sir Adam Beck proposes to develop at Niagara. If Sir Adam Beck had discovered coal deposits in Ontario capable of producing one-half of the 1914 output of Canada's coal mines Sir Adam would be acclaimed as the great benefactor of this province.

The discovery of coal deposits capable of producing 6,000,000 tons per annum would benefit Ontario no more than Ontario will be benefited by the establishment of a new source of electric energy capable of producing 600,000 h.p. per annum.

The cash value of the coal output in 1914 was $33,433,100. The cash value of the coal output that would be needed to produce the Hydro-Electric output of 600,000 h.p. per annum would be $21,000,000. Sir Adam Beck's proposal simply means that the whole industrial future of Ontario will be broadened and brightened and built up by a new Hydro movement. The movement is equivalent to the discovery of coal mines in the province, if these coal mines had a productive power almost equal to the total output of all Canada's coal mines in 1914.—Toronto Telegram.

TOWNSHIP WINS

Judgment has been given in the action brought by Leonard Shewfelt, R. B. Campbell, Albert Collins and Peter Shewfelt against the township of Kinnardine. This was a case of considerable interest to municipalities, and on a point which has never before been before the courts for decision.

Some years ago Leonard Shewfelt was appointed treasurer of the township of Kincardine. R. B. Campbell, Albert Collins and Peter Shewfelt gave the usual bond for him. In 1913 Mr. Shewfelt resigned and his sureties thought the council should cancel the bond. The auditors had each year during the time he was treasurer and when he resigned examined his books, etc, and said they were correct. The treasurer claimed they should have the bond cancelled. The township, however, took the ground that the treasurer and his bondsmen were liable not only for any mistake that may have been discovered while he was in office, but also for any mistake which might have been made though not discovered during his term of office, and that they should therefore hold the bond. The court has now held that the township is right and that the council had no right to give up the bond, and has dismissed the action with costs.—Reporter.

House Burned in Bruce Tp.

The home of Dougal McFadyen, 8th con Bruce, was destroyed by fire on Wednesday last. Mr and Mrs McFadyen and children had a narrow escape and saved nothing but the clothing they were wearing. Insurance on the house is $500 and contents $200. The loss to the young couple will be heavy.

WALKERTON

Mr Arthur Pengelly, of Truax's mill here, has bought Mr Henry Zettel's 50 acre farm on the 10th con Bruce, about two miles east of Eden Grove, and intends establishing a large bennery. Mr Pengelly has long been an ardent poultry fancier and it seems he is about to embark extensively into that business.

The announcement in Saturday's Mail and Empire that the Imperial Cordage Co Limited had been capitalized at $150,000, with the head office at Walkerton, gives rise to the belief that this factory is shortly to commence operations here on a large scale. Mr John Connor, the manager, announced on his recent trip here that as soon as the market would permit the wheels would commence turning in this establishment and that the making of rope and commercial twines would be proceeded with, and employment given to a large number of hands.

Gordon A Bonter, the Melancthon coal mine artist, who was up before Judge Klein last Thursday on the charge of conspiring to defraud Misses Kate and Isabella McKinnon of Walkerton, to whom he sold $1500 worth of the mining stock, was acquitted on the conspiracy charge. The fact that the Misses McKinnon had been recommended to buy the stock by their cousin, Miss McNeill of Rochester, N.Y., and had first written to Bonter about the charter, was the weak point in their case. As it seemed, however, from the evidence that Bonter had persuaded Mr and Mrs Ed Gibson to subscribe for $300 worth of stock on the representation that sixteen of the most prominent people in Walkerton had already purchased shares, when such was not the case, Judge Klein stated that he would be tempted, on the evidence had, to sentence him if a charge had been laid of getting money from the Gibsons under false pretenses Crown Attorney Dixon announced that such a charge had just been laid, and that Bonter was therefore charged with this offence. As Bonter stated he intended to give the parties back their money here if he could get time to raise it, he was allowed time for nine months on furnishing bail of $1000 to appear here on Sept 5th, 1916, for trial.—Herald and Times.

DAVIS—CLEMENTS

One of the prettiest weddings of the season was solemnized at the home of Mr and Mrs Arthur Clements, 10th con Elderslie, at 5 o'clock on Wednesday, Dec 8th, when their second daughter, Georgina Clara, was united in marriage to Lawrence H, youngest son of Mr and Mrs H Davis, 10th Elderslie. The bride, who was given away by her father, entered the drawing room to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march played by her sister, Eunice G. The service was taken by Rev Mr Handy, of Hobbiston. The drawing room was neatly decorated with evergreens and ferns. Miss Evangeline Clements, A T C M, of Owen Sound, aunt of the bride, sang very sweetly "For you alone." The bride wore an exquisite gown of silk crepe trimmed with pearls and lace, and tulle veil crowned with orange blossoms and carried a shower bouquet of white roses. Miss Hazel Dudgeon, niece of the groom, prettily dressed in pink, acted as flower girl. The groom's gift to the bride was a pendant of pearls, to the flower girl a gold necklace. The guests, numbering seventy-five, then repaired to the dining room, which was artistically decorated, and partook of a dainty luncheon, after which a very fitting programme was enjoyed by all. Many beautiful and useful presents received indicated the esteem in which the bride and groom are held. The happy couple then left for Chesley where they will reside, and be at home to their friends after the New Year. The bride's travelling costume was a suit of navy blue broadcloth and hat to match.

Entrance Teacher Resigned

Miss Cora E. L. Fisher, who has been in charge of the Paisley Public School entrance and junior fourth classes for four years, has handed in her resignation, with the intention of accepting a position as art and literature teacher in a Canadian city school.

Paisley Municipal Affairs

There seems to be very little discussion of election matters in town. The council of 1915 may be called upon to serve the municipality for another year, without opposition. A feeling prevails that an election should be avoided, for economical reasons, and there are no new candidates coming forward with issues that call for a contest and its attendant expenditure. Of the three retiring school trustees, Dr. Hopston, J. R. Laidlaw and Dr. Black, the first two named are eligible for re-election, while the last is out of bounds, and his place will have to be filled.

Nominations next Monday. The ratepayers of Paisley should be out to the evening meeting to hear the nightwatch question discussed. A communication was received from the county clerk, re extra fees charged non-resident pupils in continuation school. The Board discussed the matter, and concluded that proper representations should be made to the county council to show that the larger fee should be paid by the non-residents.

CHAPTER XXX.

And Rosalie passed into a well- ordered kitchen, over which presided another Billy—Mrs. Attridge's servant, and now Rosalie's maid-of-all-work.

Rosalie found him stirring the batter for the pancakes. She told him she expected a stranger to tea, and that he must make coffee also, and dress two prairie fowls, and broil some ham. And next she went into her dining-room and set her table, adorning it with her finest damask tablecloth, and best china, and placing upon it her nicest cakes and preserves. She was so engaged when Mr. Sutherland returned, bringing in Uncle Billy.

She received him with an affectionate welcome.

"I am come to stay with you as long as I possibly can, my dear. Although a man like me has a great many conflicting claims upon his time and presence."

Rosalie assured him that the longer he stayed the better. As Billy had put supper on the table, she invited him in to that meal. And Mr. Bolling sat down and enjoyed it with as much gusto as if he had not partaken of a heavy luncheon at Garner's. Mr. Bolling had been invited by Mark to take a stroll around the premises.

Rosalie's benevolent heart was gratified at having some one else to be good to, and Mark was pleased to see her satisfaction.

CHAPTER XXXI.

Mark Sutherland had been home eight days before he broke to Rosalie the sad news of his uncle's betrayal of his trust, and her own loss of fortune.

Rosalie heard it with sorrow. She replied by not one word, but dropped her head upon her hands, and remained silent.

"Rosalie, my love, look up! This loss of fortune which you take so much to heart, is not inevitable. Disclaim the signature, expose the forgery——"

She raised her head, and looked up at him.

"And what then?"

"Your estate cannot be touched."

"And the man who confidingly loaned the money?"

"Will lose forty thousand dollars."

"And Clement Sutherland?"

"May go to the State prison for ten years."

"We must lose it, dear Mark; we must lose it!"

"My poor Rose, I knew what your decision would be; I told the wretched man so. But, my dearest, should you fail to expose the forged mortgage, you will not only lose the sum of forty thousand dollars, which was raised on your plantation, but, by the peremptory sale of the plantation, the property will be sacrificed at about a fourth of its real value, and you will lose all."

"Well, well; let all go—all, but peace of mind; could we take comfort in anything, dearest Mark, if a deliberate deed of ours had consigned a fellow-creature—an old, gray-headed man—to a prison? Oh, never let it be dreamed of, Mark."

"That is a woman's thought! Men would deem it a stern duty to prosecute the criminal."

"And do you?"

"I should so deem it, but for the thought that this is the first offence, under great temptation; that punishment, in his case, would not be reformatory, but ruinous."

This was all that was said then. Mr. Bolling's entrance interrupted the conversation; and Billy appeared and summoned the party to tea.

CHAPTER XXXII.

A week after this, Mark Sutherland once more left home for a visit to Mississippi, on business. He went to make a final settlement with Clement Sutherland.

The miserable old man had fallen almost into a state of idiocy.

The plantation was sold under mortgage. When all was done, Mark Sutherland found that, of all his wife's fortune, but a paltry two thousand dollars was left.

With this, Mark prepared to leave. But the day that he had fixed for his departure was signalized by a catastrophe that delayed his journey for weeks. It was the dreadful death of St. Gerald Ashley, who, during a fit of mania-a-potu, threw himself from a second-story window, and, striking his head upon the iron trellis below, was instantly killed.

India was distracted — Clement Sutherland helpless. And Mark remained at Cashmere to take the direction of the funeral.

Three days from the death, when all was over, Mark Sutherland sought the presence of the widow. He went to her with no tender condolments. He found her in her faded and dingy boudoir.

He took a seat, and spoke:

"I come to you, Mrs. Ashley, with no vain words of sympathy, which would seem as untrue to your sense as they would be upon my lips. I come to set before you the stern realities of your position, and, if possible, to awaken you to its duties and responsibilities." He paused a moment, and she lifted up her head, saying:

"Speak, sir! but you will not find me haughty now!"

His lips curled, and then he compressed them.

"Your husband is dead! you know too well what fatal power brought down that high, proud nature to dishonor and to death——"

"Speak—ay, speak—and spare not! I deserve it! Most of all, from you!" she exclaimed.

"Yet, India, for the kindred blood in our mutual veins—for the regard I once bore you, and the anxiety I still feel for you—I would point out a way of recovery——"

"Tell me, Mark! Oh, I know that I have been guilty! but not wantonly guilty, as you think! God knoweth that I have not! One mad, one frantic act—led to all the rest—ruined my life and his!"

"Yet that act could not have been committed by any but an intensely selfish nature, India. You cannot now recall the past, but you are very young, and the long future is all yours. Your husband is dead, your father imbecile, and there is no one to take the direction of affairs on this plantation. You must redeem the past by the future. You cannot now bring back St. Gerald Ashley from his dishonored grave, but you can do somewhat to save his memory from reproach. He died heavily in debt. You have property of your own. This sum of Cashmere was secured to you on your marriage, leaving your father a life-interest in it. I do, not, therefore, mean this. But you have other property in your own right—devote it to the liquidation of Ashley's debts. When you estranged him from your bosom, he sought sympathy and affection from a poor girl who lives in the pine forest. This poor, fallen girl, is unprovided for, desolate, and heart-broken; and what I have to enjoin upon you is, that you seek out that poor victim of St. Gerald's sin, and make such a provision for herself and child as will save her from despair and deeper vice."

"And if I do all this—if I spend all that I have in clearing St. Gerald's memory from debt, and if I take this poor girl and her child under my protection, will you restore me your esteem?"

"My thoughts, my esteem, should be no motive with you. I enjoin you to do it because it is right."

"Oh, Mark, I will do it. But you have not learned of Him, that divine, compassionate One, who would not break the bruised reed or quench the smoking flax!"

She raised her eyes, doubtingly, to his face.

"Is there anything else, Mark?" she asked.

"Yes, India, your people; remember that if your life should be cut off before you emancipate them, when your soul is in the spiritual world, you will see those whom you have left on earth, doomed, with their children and their children's children, to a bondage, from which you have no longer the power and the privilege to free them. Oh! I think, India, it is a fearful responsibility, it is an awful one, to die and leave them so."

"To do all this would leave me very poor."

"Be poor! let all go but peace of mind."

"Mark, is this all that you require of me?"

"No; your father is imbecile in mind, and no longer capable of directing even his most trivial affairs. You must apply to the court for authority, and take the control of his estate. I will remain here a few weeks longer to aid you. You must right every wrong that he has done, or others suffered through him."

"And if I do all this, will you give me back regard?"

"If the motive be not pure, how shall the act be? India! I have not asked you to do this from the fear of any punishment, or the hope of any reward; I have not required it at your hands for God's sake, least of all for mine; I have simply demanded it in the name of the right! there is a sentiment expressed which, for sublime simplicity, transcends everything not written in the Holy Scriptures."

He was about to leave the room, but seeing her in an attitude of the most desolate grief, he turned back, and laying his hand kindly upon the bowed head, he said:

"Dear India, I am writing to Rosalie; shall I tell her to come down and remain with you for a few weeks?"

"No, not now! It would bring back the memory of happier days. Not now! it is very dark to me."

"Poorest India! I wish you would let her lead you to the only true source of light, and strength, and joy!"

"I cannot! I cannot die!"

"She would teach you to live; she would teach her truth, that 'out of the heart are the issues of life——'"

"And of death!" said India, in a hollow voice.

Burning his stay he lodged at the village of C——. He labored very industriously, and, with the assistance of lawyers and clerks, reduced the chaos of the Cashmere accounts into something like order, and made the fortune, but a paltry two thousand dollars was left.

With this, Mark prepared to leave. But the day that he had fixed for his departure was signalized by a catastrophe that delayed his journey for weeks. "She would teach you to live; she would teach her truth, that 'out of the heart are the issues of life——'"

"And of death!" said India, in a hollow voice.

During his stay he lodged at the village of C——. He labored very industriously, and, with the assistance of lawyers and clerks, reduced the chaos of the Cashmere accounts into something like order, and made the best of a bad matter. At the end of the third week he completed his work, and bade adieu to India and Cashmere.

And in twelve days he was at home again.

Rosalie, who had seen his approach from afar, came down from the house to meet him. She looked smiling and happy as she gave him both her hands. He greeted her fondly, and then drew her arm within his own.

He did not ask her how she was; for oh! such feelings had suddenly grown too deep, too real, too painful to be spoken. A sort of fierce jealousy and antagonism to disease and death took possession of him.

With more refined spiritual insight than he possessed, Rosalie perceived his thoughts and emotions; and, as much as possible, avoided giving him pain. If the exercise of the greatest fortitude and patience could conceal her sufferings, she never complained, never even alluded to her mortal illness.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

In the political world the next year the spirit of party ran very high. A great moral as well as national problem agitated the whole country. Mark Sutherland had been nominated for the Senate, and his friends labored perseveringly and anxiously for his election. Rosalie, as usual, entered heart and soul into all his toils and anxieties.

Mark Sutherland returned from a campaigning tour at the end of the month with the flush of hope upon his cheek, the light of anticipated triumph in his eyes; but both light and color faded from his face at the sudden sight of Rosalie's brilliant eyes and burning cheeks.

"Indeed, Rosalie, you must, you shall give up school. You are not strong enough to continue it. My election is nearly certain, and then another sphere more graceful, agreeable awaits you, dearest."

Rosalie smiled.

"Dear Mark, whenever you make a circuit among our hardy country people, you come back thinking me more fragile than ever from the contrast."

And so she reassured him, and she continued the charge of her school.

But the day came at last when her school had to be closed, and the labor was obliged to rest from her labor. It was during the afternoon session of a certain Friday that a sudden failure of strength drew all color from her face, her head dropped forward on her desk, and she swooned. Her school was opened but once more, and for the last time.

Rosalie had been directed by her physician to spend the fall and winter in the South. Rosalie wrote to her step-mother, telling her frankly of the precarious tenure of her life and of the order of her physician relative to her removal South. There could but one possible answer to such a letter suggest itself to the mind of Rosalie's affectionate step-mother. Accordingly, in about two weeks that lady arrived at Shelton, stopping only long enough at the hotel to write a note to Mark, requesting him to break the news to Rosalie and then come and take her to his wife.

The meeting between Rosalie and her step-mother was most affectionate and tender, but the patience of Rose and the self-possession of Mrs. Lauderdale restrained their mutual agitation. As soon as she found herself alone with Mark Sutherland, she said:

"And you must let her go at once, dear Mark. She is ilier than you think, and the mornings and the evenings are already chill in this bleak clime. And if you cannot possibly leave your political interests here, you may confidently trust her to me on the journey, for I love her as my own child and will not leave her night or day; and you can join us as soon as you get through this election."

"No, I will never suffer her to go without me. I will never leave her again. What is success to me if I lose her? You do not know all that she has been to me!"

A few days after this the whole party set out for the South.

DISHES FAVORED BY RULERS.

"I Could Eat Codlings Twice a Day," Said Czar of Russia.

Czar Nicholas of Russia is fond of fish of any kind. He is especially partial to dried codfish seasoned with oil, pepper and garlic. Even better the Czar likes kaboljan, codlings prepared in oil. He once remarked to the late President Faure of France:

"I could eat codlings twice a day."

The King of Italy and King Alfonso of Spain have a weakness for sweet things, such as whipped cream, chocolate and tarts.

In many cases the national dish is a favorite of the king or emperor of the particular country. King Victor Emmanuel of Italy declares his great liking for polenta, the Indian meal porridge, which he eats as regularly as the poorest peasant. He also likes roast chicken giblets with calves' brains and artichokes.

Vienna schnitzel is a favorite dish of the Emperor of Austria. The emperor is also fond of calves' tongue in red wine.

The Czar of Russia, however, does not care for caviar, the prepared sturgeon roe, which is the daily dish of the Russian peasantry. Instead, he is unusually fond of certain Russian vegetable soups called borscht and tschi.

The late Pope is said to have lived on a very simple diet, as simple as that of the poorest tradesman. In the morning he drank a cup of coffee, at noon he took a little soup and meat. His favorite food was the Italian national dish, polenta.

Monstrous Names.

The longest name ever inflicted on an English child must surely be that of an unfortunate born at Derby in 1882, on whom her parents bestowed a name for every letter of the alphabet, says the London Chronicle: Anna Bertha Cecilia Diana Emily Fanny Gertrude Hypatia Inez Jane Kate Louise Maude Nora—I will cease the infliction until it comes to Zenobia! The Rev. Ralph Lyonel Tollemache Tollemache was another person with a craze for long names. He baptized his eldest son Lyulph Ydevallo Odin Nestor Egbert Lyonel Twolmag Hugh Ecchenwyse Saxon Esa Orme Cromwell Nevil Dysart Plantagenet.

A Sure Way.

"Do you know," he stammered, "you could make my wife mighty proud of me?"

"I could?" asked his boss. "How?"

"Just by raising my salary," was the reply.

The Scientific Farmer.

"He's one of them there scientific farmers."

"What kind is that?"

"He lives in the city an' studies the books an' pays us practical fellers good wages for doin' the work."

When four years old, children are generally twice as tall as they were at birth.

PRACTICAL FARMING

Farm Notes.

Pay attention to the little details.

Dead beets—those killed by weeds and lack of attention.

The farm home can and should be made more attractive.

One well fed hen is better than two half starved ones.

Sunlight is a natural tonic for the little pigs, and they revel in it.

Actual experience is the only way in which success can be attained in bee keeping.

To prevent rabbits gnawing the trees, mix fish oil or strong red pepper with whitewash and apply.

The two grains, Indian corn and Kaffir corn, are almost identical in chemical composition.

Nothing ever came so near turning December into June for dairy cattle and sheep as the silo.

Poultry keeping is more profitable than dairying—for the man who likes poultry better than he does cows.

Having the pigs farrowed as near one time as possible greatly simplifies the work of feeding and caring for them.

Don't forget to gather in road dust or sifted coal ashes, so that the hens will have something to wallow in this winter.

The story of the farm is written in the sweat of the farmer's brow, and punctuated with tears of sorrow and tears of joy.

Do not slight the milking, but get the last drop. There is no quicker way to decrease the flow of milk than to leave a little each time.

While still young, but full grown, the chicken is best suited for food. As it grows old, the flesh loses its flavor and increases in toughness.

Some farmers think it a waste of time to groom work horses in order to make them look sleek and shiny and would rather leave them in their natural state.

As long as there are points in the farming business that are unsettled, and as long as the man behind the farm wishes to make progress, there will be something for the farm papers to do.

Is the ram kept from the ewes in the day time or does he run with them all of the time. Better keep them apart, allowing him with them a few hours daily. Result: Better lambs and more of them.

The farmer or any other person that has the room, who fails to keep a flock of hens, is making a mistake. Besides the "home consumption" part of the programme, chickens and eggs are excellent products for the market and are always in demand.

Millet seed is not only an excellent poultry food, but, being very small, there is nothing better to scatter in the litter as an inducement for the fowls to get the exercise they require. Throw a handful in deep litter in the morning and it will keep the fowls busy and active all day.

It is really a crime the way some farmers are permitting the escape into gullies and creeks of so much manure.

The records show that constant cultivation depletes the fertility of the soil, and the farmer who allows this valuable soil builder to escape is the one whose farm soon becomes barren. Preserve the manure.

When to Cut Alfalfa.

For all classes of animals except horses, alfalfa should be cut for hay when the new shoots or stems begin to appear at the crown. These are easily seen just as they come up among the old stems at about the beginning of blossoming time. Cutting earlier than this is not desirable or profitable, since the yield will be smaller and the hay will be more difficult to cure. It should not be allowed to get much beyond this stage for two reasons: (1) Although a somewhat heavier first cutting of hay can be secured by allowing it to stand longer than the time recommended, the hay is neither as palatable, nor as nutritious. (2) Leaving the first crop after it is at the proper stage to cut delays and reduces the second crop, since the new shoots coming from the crown are cut off with the first crop. When alfalfa is to be fed to horses, it may be allowed to grow slightly longer than when it is fed to cattle, but it should never be left until the second crop is injured in cutting the first crop.

Consumption is most common between the ages of 25 and 30.

Christmas Appeal

FOR

The Hospital for Sick Children

COLLEGE ST., TORONTO.

Dear Mr. Editor:—

Thanks for your kindness in allowing me the privilege of appealing at this Christmas time on behalf of the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto.

In the 40 years of the Hospital's existence there have been treated within its walls 26,168 children as in-patients; 231,768 as out-patients; a grand total of 257,976 in and out patients.

The Hospital Sick Children gives a province-wide service, for little patients from every section of Ontario have sought its aid. Last year 499 patients were admitted from 232 places outside the city of Toronto. In 1914 there were 394 from 210 places.

Of the 2,838 in-patients last year 1,771 were medical cases and 1,067 surgical. In the orthopedic department of the 2,838 in-patients, 264 were treated for deformities, 21 Pott's disease of the spine, 10 lateral curvature of the spine, 10 bow-legs, 55 club-feet, 17 dislocations of hip, 42 tubercular disease of knee, hip, ankle, wrist and elbow; 76 infantile paralysis, 3 wry neck, and 21 miscellaneous.

Our battle is never-ending—is one that will continue while the world lasts, for it is the fight between the armies of life and death, to save the child life. The sick little ones, sons and daughters not only of our soldier men, but of the fathers and mothers still in this home-land province.

The Hospital is beating back disease and death, the enemies that assail the lives of little children as the British Empire is beating back Germany, Austria and Turkey, the enemies that assail the life of liberty.

So we appeal to the generous people of Ontario not to forget those so near and dear to us, who lie in the beds and cots of this great charity.

Will the people at large, as of old, respond to our call? Will they remember that every year is a war year for the Hospital, every day a day of battle, and that the Hospital needs money, not for its own sake, but for the children's sake?

The Hospital has waged its war for forty years. The people of Toronto and Ontario have been its friend, and this year of all years it requires help. Surely you will give to a charity that cares for every sick child in Ontario, for only as your money reaches the Hospital can the Hospital's mercy reach the children.

Every dollar is a link of kindness in the chain of mercy that joins the money in your pocket to the miseries of some child's life, some mother's heart.

Remember that Christmas calls you to open the purse of your kindness to the Hospital, that the Hospital may open the heart of its help to the children.

Will you send a dollar, or more if you can, to Douglas Davidson, Secretary-Treasurer, or

J. ROSS ROBERTSON,
Chairman of the Board of Trustees,
Toronto.

BANK OF MONTREAL

NINETY-EIGHTH ANNUAL REPORT SHOWS BANK IN VERY STRONG POSITION.

Exceptional interest attaches this year to the Annual Report of Canada's leading Bank, and the addresses delivered at the Annual Meeting by the President and General Manager. They afford an insight into the financial consequences of a year of war on the country generally, and into the outlook for the future, as interpreted by men who have every opportunity to judge it.

Mr. H. V. Meredith, the President, pointed out that the effect of the war on Canadian trade had been less injurious than had been expected, and that this year's bountiful harvest may not only be expected to stimulate current trade, but to attract renewed emigration to Canada.

The Annual Report shows the Bank of Montreal in a position of unprecedented strength. With assets of $302,980,854—an increase for the year of $38,800,138—it takes rank with the most powerful banking institutions in the world. Of this enormous sum no less than $170,007,568 is in cash and liquid assets. This is over 64 per cent. of the Bank's total public liabilities—a ratio whose significance will be better understood when it is compared with 55.4 per cent. last year, and a little less than 50 per cent. (considered a high proportion in normal times) in 1913.

While holding so large a proportion of the Bank's assets in liquid form does not tend to large profits, it is a source of great strength not only to the Bank, but to the whole of Canada, in these trying and difficult times.

The profits for the year, however, were most gratifying. Amounting to $2,108,631, they provided for the usual quarterly dividend and two 1% bonuses on the Capital of $16,000,000; the War Tax on Bank Note Circulation, $122,347; and left over $60,000 to be added to the Profit and Loss Account, bringing the balance of the latter up to $1,293,952. This, of course, is in addition to the Rest Account of $16,000,000—equal to the Capital.

Owing to the reduced volume of commercial business in the country, the current loans dropped from $108,-845,332 in 1914 to $99,078,566. Loans to municipalities, on the other hand, show an increase of over two millions, reaching the figure of $11,203,-472.

One of the most striking and important features of the Report is the remarkable increase in Deposits. Those bearing no interest have increased during the year from $42,-689,031 to $75,745,729, while interest-bearing deposits have grown to $160,-277,083—a total increase of $39,800,-188. Though this is partly accounted for by special transactions, it must be regarded as highly satisfactory and an especial mark of public confidence.

In reviewing the year, the President laid special stress on the record harvest in the West, where a greatly increased area under cultivation has given the highest average yield in the history of the country. The estimated value of the grain crop of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan he placed at four hundred million dollars—a sum which could be depended upon to liquidate much indebtedness and stimulate current trade.

Referring to the remarkable change in Canada's position from a debtor to a creditor nation, Mr. Meredith said:

"In the seven months ending October 31st, 1913, the value of exports of Canadian products was $245,550,-000, and in the same period of 1914 was $226,757,000; while this year in these seven months we have exported Canadian products of the value of $326,430,000, or $100,000,000 more than last year, and the great crop surplus has still to go forward.

"Comparing the foreign trade of Canada for the seven-months' period ending with October, imports have declined from $390,544,000 in 1913 to $253,107,000 in 1915, while exports of domestic products, as I have said, have risen from $245,550,000 to $326,-430,000; and adverse balance of $145,-000,000 being converted into a favorable balance of $73,323,000, or a betterment in respect of foreign trade of no less than $218,000,000 within the short space of two years."

Taking a prudently optimistic view of the future, Mr. Meredith said:

"The position of Canada is a highly favored one, with an assured future of growth, development and general prosperity. At present, however, we live in the shadow of the great war, to which all else must be subservient. What its duration will be, and the position in which its termination will find us, can be matter of the merest conjecture. The vast armies now engaged in the struggle cannot be kept in the field indefinitely. The financial factor is daily assuming increased importance, and in this respect the advantage is unquestionably with Great Britain and her Allies.

"After the war, a readjustment of trade conditions is to be expected. The flood of wealth which has attended the export of munitions and war supplies must of necessity be largely curtailed, and a new set of problems will have to be faced. As I have said on former occasions when I have had the pleasure of addressing you, if economy be exercised to meet the increased burden of taxation, of which we must bear our share, and the production of exportable articles increased to the utmost extent, to protect our gold supply and minimize our borrowings, and if we keep strong in working capital, then no matter what difficulties the future may have in store for us, we can look forward to them with a degree of complacency. Our agricultural resources and undeveloped wealth will enable us to bear the strain which may be imposed upon us, and we shall in the end come safely through the period of economic upheaval and world-wide conflict—with a larger debt, it is true, but with our ability to meet it unquestioned and our economic position not seriously impaired."

SPECIAL WAR STAMPS.

Some Issues Have Already Become Valuable.

Stamps that a few months ago were of very little value will be much in demand in the future owing to the alterations in the map of Europe, and indeed of the world, brought about by the present war.

Among some curiosities already being collected and treasured, says London Answers, may be mentioned a number of Red Cross postage stamps issued from the French post office in Morocco, from which certain letters and figures have been omitted. England has not issued any official war stamps whatever, but it is interesting to observe the issue of "occupation stamps" in the invaded German colony of Togo.

No postage stamps of any description were found in Lome after it had been evacuated by the Germans, for they had destroyed or hidden all there were. But a great number of stamps were discovered in a box sunk in a dry well in another village, and they were over-printed, some with French and some with English words, for provisional use. But only a limited number were treated this way, and the demand for them from stamp dealers all over the world has been so enormous that the price has already risen considerably.

Denmark, although not yet involved in war, has prepared a special war postcard and supplied it to the naval and military forces which have been mobilized. It is the ordinary five-ore postcard that has been overprinted with the initials, in black lettering, "S. B.," which signifies Soldater-Brevkort, "soldiers' postcard"—one card a week is handed out free to each soldier and sailor.

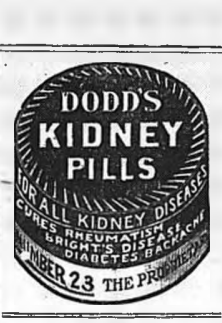
It is said that one of the most valuable stamps in the future will be that of Samoa, which was overprinted by the New Zealand postal authorities with a local surcharge. One single sheet containing 100 stamps has a peculiar error, and as only forty of those stamps are available already the price paid for them has reached £20 each.

THE VERY TIME

When Powerful Food Is Most Needed.

The need of delicate yet nutritious food is never felt so keenly as when a convalescent gets a set back on account of weak stomach. Then is when Grape-Nuts shows its power, for it is a most scientific and easily digested food.

"About a year ago," writes a western woman, "my little six-year-old niece moved to a new home. She naturally had a change of diet and of course a change of water, and somehow she contracted typhoid fever.



"After a long siege her case seemed hopeless, doctors gave her up, and she was nothing but skin and bones, couldn't eat anything, and for weeks did not know even her father or mother. Her parents, in trying to get something delicate and nourishing that she could eat, finally hit upon Grape-Nuts food, and it turned out to be just the thing.

"She seemed to relish it, was soon conscious of her surroundings, and began to gain strength so rapidly that in a short time she was as well, playful and robust as if she had never been ill.

"We all feel that Grape-Nuts was the predominating factor in saving the sweet little girl's life."

A doctor, celebrated as much for his love of good living as for professional skill, called upon an eccentric nobleman who was just beginning a most elaborate dinner. After a while, receiving no invitation to join his lordship, the medical man said:

"Now sir, if I were in your place, I should say, 'Pray, doctor, do as I am doing.'"

"So sorry," said his lordship. "Well, doctor, do as I am doing go home and eat your dinner!"

WAR TRANSPORT SERVICE.

"Ignorance" and "Ineptitude" in Admiralty Methods.

"From the point of view of the shipping man the whole history of the war, as far as the transport service is concerned, is a wicked story of ignorance, ineptitude and colossal waste," declares the editor of Syren and Shipping, the leading journal of the British shipping trade. He adds:

"Costly and useful ships were used for months as prison ships. Supership like the Aquitania were employed on scouting missions, their magnificent passenger equipment gutted. Ships were allowed to load cargo or to book a full passenger list and then owners were informed that the Admiralty required these boats."

An instance is given of a 7,000-ton boat which was all ready to sail, with 300 passengers, when it was taken over and sent to the west coast of South America, although it might have been loaded with coal and realized a small fortune. Another case is given of a 6,000-ton boat at Huelva about to load with a cargo of iron ore for England, which was requisitioned suddenly and sent empty to the Pacific, although there should have been plenty of merchant ships available much nearer the desired destination.

"How long," asks the Journal, "will these methods be tolerated? In the national interest, a committee of shipping men should have been selected to organize the Admiralty chartering."

The man who is afraid of work deserves to be scared to death.

BIG AUSTRALIAN CRUISER.

First of Type Constructed Entirely by British Colony.

The cruiser Brisbane, the latest unit in the Australian navy, which was launched successfully at the Cockatoo Island Naval Yard, Sydney, last month, is the largest vessel of any type yet launched under the Union Jack in the southern hemisphere. The Brisbane is of 5,400 tons, and is the first cruiser to be constructed completely by any of the overseas British dominions.

At the launching she was christened by Mrs. Fisher, the wife of the Prime Minister, who is from Queensland. It is after the capital of that State that the cruiser is named.

It is hoped to place the Brisbane in commission next August. She is to be followed on the stocks by another vessel of the same type, to be called the Adelaide, in honor of the capital of South Australia.

Baby's Own Tablets are a gentle laxative. They are absolutely safe and so pleasant in action, that once the mother has used them for her little ones, she will never again resort to that harsh, ill-smelling, bad-tasting castor oil, which baby always fought against taking. Baby will take the Tablets with a smile, and thousands of mothers tell us their little ones will coax for them. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Paisley Advocate

PAISLEY, DEC. 22nd, 1915

—Paisley School Board considers that it is not at all unfair to charge non-resident pupils in the Continuation School a larger fee than that paid by resident pupils. While the Government and County grants cover a large part of the expense of maintenance of these classes, the building and equipment are provided by the school section. The extra cost of the school accommodation in Paisley is best demonstrated by a comparison of the school taxes paid by a farmer in the section and one outside, the value of the properties being equal. The man in Paisley section will pay a total tax of about $80, while the one in a rural school section will not be taxed more than $50. the school rates being higher in the one case than the other. Is it unreasonable, then, that the son or daughter of a non-resident should be charged $5 per year more for the course than the son or daughter of the more heavily taxed ratepayer?

—General Sir Sam Hughes said, in addressing the Sportsmen's Patriotic Association in Toronto, that Canadians are the best shooting division in the war, and urged the need of training. Many people go around singing "Rule Britannia," etc., puff out their cheeks and chests and say how loyal they are. That, in Sir Sam's opinion, is a menace to the country. The man who can handle a rifle and bayonet is what is wanted. "There is not ten per cent of you men in the audience who are trained to prevent us becoming slaves," he asserted, but the country is full of dear good fellows who sing so londly."

FACTS FOR THOSE WHO WOULD ENLIST

When a man is thinking of enlisting there are five questions that he wants answered. They are:

1.—How long am I to serve? Until the end of the war and six months after, if required.

2.—What pay shall I receive? Your pay as a private will be $1.00 per day and 10 cents field allowance. Besides this you will be clothed, equipped and subsisted by the Government.

3.—What will my wife receive during my absence? Every month there will be paid her a separation allowance of $20.00 (also part of your pay) and if this is not enough to comfortably sustain your family the Canadian Patriotic Fund will further assist them.

4.—What will happen if I am wounded, sick or taken prisoner? You will be cared for by the Government and your pay continued until you are discharged. If you are permanently disabled an allowance will be paid you of $264, $192, $132 or $75 per annum varying accordingly to the extent of the injury or disability. If taken prisoner your pay and allowances will continue as if you were still in the field.

5.—What will be done for my wife and children if I die while on active service? The Government will provide a pension of $22 monthly for a widow and $5 for each child. The widowed mother of a single man, if the son be her sole support, is treated in the same way as a wife.

The sums stated above apply to private soldiers and are increased according to rank. If you wish for further information ask the Secretary of the branch of the Canadian Patriotic Fund in your town.

FROM EGYPT

The following letter is from Robert Tucker, who is with the Queen's University Hospital Corps in the East:

Cairo, Egypt, Nov 11th

DEAR PEOPLE.—Well, here I am back in Cairo once more, and I am glad to say that I am feeling much improved in health after my two weeks' trip to Cyprus. Three of us went and it was a very nice change. Coming back, as soon as we landed at Alexandria we could tell the difference—a different smell, rather unpleasant, as one of the boys put it "the smell of the great unwashed throng," meaning the Egyptians, who are certainly not a particularly clean people. However, one gets used to it when with them for a while, and do not notice that there is such a difference. Cyprus, being only an island and not very densely inhabited, you there have the benefit of pure sea breezes not contaminated with other odors. We left Cairo two weeks ago, travelling by train to Alexandria. Here we took a tramp steamer and sailed to Port Said where we lay for about six hours or more. I was glad we touched at this port as it gave me the chance to see the entrance to the Suez Canal, and a wonderful work it is. We were not allowed to enter the town, but I do not think there was much to be seen. From there we went straight north to Cyprus, landing on Friday night, motored to the camp three miles away and had a bite to eat and went to bed. The place was this usual, mostly rock, with lots of locust trees from which the people make their living. Hills in abundance, and not far away vineyards where grapes are grown. I certainly ate my share of this kind of fruit. Of course we had to buy, but they were cheap. We only stayed two days and didn't get to see any of the towns, as they were out of bounds. However, our little town, Lemasol, bordering on the ocean front, looked nice. The inhabitants of the island are chiefly Turks and Greeks. I was not very favorably impressed with the Greeks I saw. I suppose they weren't of the better class. Our companions in camp were chiefly British Tommies. I met a nice Scotch laddie who lives on the Island of Islay. His father has a farm there of twelve thousand acres and I judge is wealthy. I enjoyed talking to him as he was interested in Canada. We saw some of the rougher British soldiers as well, good fellows at heart but rough in manners. One rather tends to appreciate the nice boys we have in our corps the more after being away for awhile. I was glad to get back altho I enjoyed the trip pretty well. Tomorrow I expect to start to work. One of our very best men—Col. Connell—has been called home. Mr. Shaw we hated to see him go, as to our way of thinking he was the best man we had on the corps. The college could not get along without him, so he had to go. One of the sisters said she cried when he came to say good-bye, and the boys had lumps in their throats when he left. I wonder what it is like in Canada to-day. I would love to be there if it is a nice fall day, but I suppose ere you get this letter snow will be upon the ground and it will be cold and wet. It is nice here now, although still pretty warm during the day.

HER DREAMS CAME TRUE

MELLE. C. GAUDREAU

Roches P.Q., Jan. 14th, 1915.

"I suffered for many years with terrible Indigestion and Constipation. I became thin and miserable. I had frequent dizzy spells and became so run down that I never thought I would get well again.

A neighbor advised me to try 'Fruit-a-tives'. I did so and to the surprise of my doctor, I began to improve and realized my cure with 'Fruit-a-tives'. I continued this medicine and all my Indigestion and Constipation was relieved. I consider that I owe my life to 'Fruit-a-tives' and I want to say to those who suffer from Indigestion, Constipation or Headaches, try 'Fruit-a-tives'. Give this lovely fruit medicine a fair chance and you will get well the same as I did".

Wants The Advocate, anyway

Mr Wm Mills, proprietor of the Mills Carriage Works at Fergus, D., is an old time Bruce Tp boy, son of the late Rich Mills, 8th con. He was in this new settlement when THE ADVOCATE made its first appearance over 50 years ago, and he is still a regular reader. In remitting his subscription Mr Mills says: "I notice that the price is going to be raised—I suppose to $2 in the U S, but I want you to send at to me, even if it is ten. I remember well the first issue of THE ADVOCATE, and have read it ever since I was big enough to read it."

Red Cross Benefit at Glamis

The I.O.O F. box social at Glamis on Monday evening was featured by a notably good address by "Biscuit" Knowles, a returned Southampton soldier. The story of his experience in the war, as he related it, is reported to be the best yet heard in these parts. Addresses were also given by Mr. W. J. McKeeman, Rev. P. Keith and Sergt. Vicars. The chair was occupied by Mr. P. C. Ryan, of Paisley, who filled it most efficiently and acceptably. Auctioneer R. J. Nesbitt sold the boxes. Total proceeds amounted to about $50.

Horses Full of Life

There were three runaways in Paisley on Saturday, which would indicate that the equines in this neck of the woods are living high on the year's big crop of oats. A team that was left standing at a large gate out in Elderslie came down Gobbie St., glided up Rowe St., and was caught in the vicinity of the rear of the Central stables. Another team took fright at boys whooping and yelling down Queen St. In negotiating the turn up Rowe St. they came to a dead stop after slamming the sleigh up against the Royal Bank doorway and damaging one of the gillers. No other damage in either of these cases. In the evening Mr. Jas. Wilson, of Greenock, started homeward, and his horse stepped around the Balmoral hotel corner at such a lively gait that the cutter skidded, throwing Mrs. Wilson out with such force that one of her arms was broken.

The Women's Patriotic League sent off the following list of articles contributed during the past month: 80 rolls of bandages, 16 dozen handkerchiefs, 9 flannel shirts, 6 mufflers, 2 pair mittens, 1 pair pillow cases, 1 surgical shirt, 27 pr. socks, 22 dozen wash cloths, 4500 mouth wipes. The sum of $50 was also sent to the Red Cross Fund, $5 to the Serbian Relief Fund and $5 to the French Relief Fund. Home from the War

Pte. Thos. H. George arrived here on Saturday to visit his parents for a few weeks. He is one of the men who formed the human wall that held back the Huns in the desperate fighting of last summer at Festubert. He was wounded in the leg by shrapnel, and after months of treatment it is found that the injury is of such a character as to put him on the disability list, his leg being stiff and he walks with a slight limp. He will therefore receive his discharge in February and thereafter be in receipt of quarter pension for life. He came across the ocean from England to Quebec in November, with 800 others, but was required to report at the point in the West where he enlisted before he could visit his parental home. Pte. George is in first-class health and looks prime. His country found him ready at the altering call for men; he fought, bled and suffered on the field, yet this young Paisleyite has no penchant for parading as a glorious hero, though here he is. He preferred to arrive at the station unannounced, and be free to go quietly to receive the first greeting from those who had kept the home fires burning, rather than be received with acclaim by the populace of the village. Tom has nobly done his "bit," but no demonstration for him.

Dated this 14th day of Dec 1915.

The Call to Men of Bruce

It is true that hundreds of Bruce men are now in the fighting lines at the front or training for the fray, but according to population the proportion is small when compared with other sections of the Province.

The hour has arrived for every eligible man in Bruce to weigh the question of his duty in this great crisis.

The organization of the 160th Bruce Battalion for overseas service is being effected as rapidly as possible. Lieut.-Col. Weir, Commanding Officer, has selected his staff, or at least a majority of the members, and is busy at the Battalion headquarters in Walkerton. They will be ready to begin the training of men as soon as there is a corps large enough to work with.

A meeting of representative men of the County was held at Walkerton on Tuesday, at which such a degree of enthusiasm was manifested as to assure every effort being made by citizens generally towards completing the organization of the new 160th. The meeting was called by Lieut.-Col. Weir, who expressed the earnest desire that all citizens of Bruce having the welfare of the Empire and the reputation of the County at heart should be present to give their assistance in this hour of national trial. The response was such as to fill the Opera House in Walkerton to overflowing. Addresses were delivered by W. S. Middlebro, M.P., of Owen Sound, Mr. C. J. Mickle, of Chesley, Col. Weir, and others.

One outcome of the meeting will likely be the formation of a recruiting League to thoroughly organize the County for recruiting purposes.

Subscribers Know Why it Should be $1.50

WE find that our subscribers are not averse to paying $1.50 for a weekly newspaper that provides them with the local news. In all branches of business there have been increases. Dozens of lines could be quoted to show the increase but the public are as conversant with these as the writer. The goods purchased in former days gave good wear and satisfaction. The purchasing price of a dollar was greater than it is to-day. Everything has advanced in price. Wages are higher, farm products bring more. Below are the Paisley market quotations taken from THE ADVOCATE of Dec. 16th, 1892 (24 years ago) and of Dec. 16th, 1915, which show exactly the difference in price of the necessaries of life that the printer has to buy from the dealers or the farmers:

	1891	1915
Potatoes, bushel	10c to 15c	60c to 75c
Beef, dressed, per cwt	$6 to $7	$10 00
Butter, lb	15c to 16c	25c to 27c
Eggs, doz	14c to 15c	27c to 30c
Flour, per cwt	$2 20	$3 00
Lard, lb	12½c	20c
Tallow, lb	4c	6c
Hogs, dressed, per cwt	$5 50	$11 75

In the face of all these increases the printer has stood up and accepted the advance not only in the commodities of life, but in materials that enter into the production of his paper, and tried to make ends meet. You know what it means to try and make a short belt meet. Well, that's what the printer has been doing. He sees failure ahead unless he increases the price of his paper. This he is going to do and he is optimistic enough to feel that his fellow townsmen and country friends will stand by him. We should all be happy and the one way to be happy is to try and make others happy.

The Same Old Thing

(Goderich Signal)

This week there was another local example of the futility of attempting to reach the public without proper advertising. Two agricultural demonstration cars were sent here by the Ontario Department of Agriculture with the object of showing improved farming methods. The idea is an excellent one, competent persons were in charge including eight or nine agricultural experts, and a large expense had been incurred in fitting up the car with exhibits of live stock, grains, etc. In short the arrangements seemed to be perfect—except that no adequate effort had been made to get the people to go and look at the exhibits. A few circulars were distributed about town, we understand, but the Department was too poor, or too stingy, to spend a few dollars in display advertisements in the local papers which would have caught the attention of the people whom it desired to reach. The result was that only a few people went to see the cars and hear the addresses, and the large expense and the expenditure of energy in fitting up the exhibits went for almost nothing.

It is not only the Department of Agriculture that makes this mistake either. Constantly we see people going to great trouble and expense to fitting up stores, getting up entertainments, arranging for sales, and so on, and then begrudging the small further expense in advertising that is necessary to make their efforts successful.

An arithmetical example might be as follows:

Jones spends $100 in getting up his show and $1 in advertising it. Total expenditure $101. Results (because he did not advertise properly) $125. Profit $24.

Bones spends $100 in getting up his show and $25 in advertising it. Total expenditure $125. Results (because he got the people interested) $250. Profit $125

Which is the better business man—Jones or Bones?

J. G. GIBSON, Returning Officer

OFFICERS OF THE BRUCE OVERSEAS BATTALION

The following draft of officers for the 160th Bruce Overseas Battalion has been announced by Col. Shannon, of London: Officer commanding—Lieut-Col. Adam Weir, Second Infantry Brigade; Senior Major—A. McLean Moffatt, late captain 32nd Regt; Junior Major—Major Thos. Hay, 32nd Regt; Adjutant—Capt. A. W. McNally, 32nd; Paymaster—Farquhar Shaw; Quartermaster—Lieut. H. D. Robertson, 32nd; Medical Officer—Dr. A. H. Veitch, Port Elgin; Company Commanders—Capt. O. E. Klein, Capt. H. Daniel, Capt. E. R. Clark, all of the 32nd.

Col. Weir is a graduate from the ranks of the 32nd Bruce Regt. He is a former resident of Brant and a brother of Mr. Arch. Weir, of that Tp. The Col. was commanding officer of the 32nd from 1900 to 1905, and after retiring was for a time Brigade Major, and latterly Brigadier of the First Infantry Brigade comprising the 22nd, 28th, 29th and 30th Regts.

Major A. McLean Moffat, second in command, is a son of the late Capt. Moffat, of Walkerton, and was a former officer of the 32nd. For several years he also followed military occupation in the U.S., being connected with the State Guards at Louisville, Kentucky, and rose to the rank of Lieut-Col. With such experience he should prove a very efficient officer. He is a son-in-law of Mr. W. J. McKeeman, of Glanus.

Major Thos. Hay, of Paisley, is also equipped with many years' experience, and is credited with taking the highest mark in field work of any candidate who ever wrote on the examination at Wolesley Barracks. In fact he is a specialist in that branch of military knowledge. He is very popular among the men of the 32nd.

Adjutant McNally, who is returning from the front to accept a position on the staff of the 160th, is another old 32nd man. He has been twice wounded in battle.

Quartermaster Robertson is a son of Mr. David Robertson, of Walkerton, and went to England as a Lieuteuant in the 34th.

Dr. Veitch, the medical officer, is from Port Elgin.

Mr. Duncan McKerracher, son of Mr. Hugh McKerracher, of Paisley, is to be assistant paymaster. Dunc has been in the employ of the Standard Bank, graduating from Paisley branch a few years ago, and will be just the man for the position.

GHOSTLY MOTORING

Unrivalled Beauty of Country Roads by Night

You are losing a lot of life if you do not drive along the country roads at night, writes an enthusiast. Beautiful as is the country during the day, it is more beautiful at night. There is a weirdness about it, an inspiration, as one drives through the country after dark that does not come when the sun is shining. The road opens up before you like a great fan, tinged with darkness. You are plunging headlong into a gigantic tunnel of night. The trees are seen only in outline—fantastic shapes form and reform before your eyes and fade into a mystery of awe. The fences wiggle in the shadows like things of life. The cattle in the fields beside the road become the goblins of the night, and from afar there beats upon the scene a flickering light in farmhouse for all the world like the single eye of Cyclops.

The light from the car brings out the defects of the road and magnifies them. A billowy path, indeed, according to the lights and shadows. Yet the machine takes the rippling waves of the road with never a complaint, and the sweet, cool breath of night installs a courage into the soul that is enchanting. Sailing upon the lakes at night is pleasant. There is the silvery wake trailing behind the boat, and the distant lights along the shore are charming. But the night time upon the lake is different from the drive at night through the country. There is not the rolling changes every second; not the pictures in the dark; not the ghostly charm of mystery which one beholds when riding along the country roads when the stars are twinkling. There is nothing comparable with the country ride at night.

OFFICERS OF THE BRUCE OVERSEAS BATTALION

The following draft of officers for the 160th Bruce Overseas Battalion has been announced by Col. Shannon, of London: Officer commanding—Lieut-Col. Adam Weir, Second Infantry Brigade; Senior Major—A. McLean Moffatt, late captain 32nd Regt; Junior Major—Major Thos. Hay, 32nd Regt; Adjutant—Capt. A. W. McNally, 32nd; Paymaster—Farquhar Shaw; Quartermaster—Lieut. H. D. Robertson, 32nd; Medical Officer—Dr. A. H. Veitch, Port Elgin; Company Commanders—Capt. O. E. Klein, Capt. H. Daniel, Capt. E. R. Clark, all of the 32nd.

Col. Weir is a graduate from the ranks of the 32nd Bruce Regt. He is a former resident of Brant and a brother of Mr. Arch. Weir, of that Tp. The Col. was commanding officer of the 32nd from 1900 to 1905, and after retiring was for a time Brigade Major, and latterly Brigadier of the First Infantry Brigade comprising the 22nd, 28th, 29th and 30th Regts.

Major A. McLean Moffat, second in command, is a son of the late Capt. Moffat, of Walkerton, and was a former officer of the 32nd. For several years he also followed military occupation in the U.S., being connected with the State Guards at Louisville, Kentucky, and rose to the rank of Lieut-Col. With such experience he should prove a very efficient officer. He is a son-in-law of Mr. W. J. McKeeman, of Glanus.

Major Thos. Hay, of Paisley, is also equipped with many years' experience, and is credited with taking the highest mark in field work of any candidate who ever wrote on the examination at Wolesley Barracks. In fact he is a specialist in that branch of military knowledge. He is very popular among the men of the 32nd.

Adjutant McNally, who is returning from the front to accept a position on the staff of the 160th, is another old 32nd man. He has been twice wounded in battle.

Quartermaster Robertson is a son of Mr. David Robertson, of Walkerton, and went to England as a Lieuteuant in the 34th.

Dr. Veitch, the medical officer, is from Port Elgin.

Mr. Duncan McKerracher, son of Mr. Hugh McKerracher, of Paisley, is to be assistant paymaster. Dunc has been in the employ of the Standard Bank, graduating from Paisley branch a few years ago, and will be just the man for the position.

DIARY OF ANDREW DARLING FOUND

TELLING OF THE DEATH OF NAPOLEON.

The Upholsterer Who Made the Arrangements for the Emperor's Funeral.

The interest of the world in the life and death of Napoleon, perennial and inexhaustible as it is, will be quickened afresh by a remarkable document which has just been published in London. This is the lost diary of Andrew Darling, the upholsterer who made the arrangements for the funeral of the fallen Emperor at St. Helena. He was the representative of a firm of London upholsterers who had undertaken to furnish Napoleon's dwelling and also took some part in the victualling of his household. In the discharge of his duties he was constantly at Longwood, but probably he never came across Napoleon except by accident. At last when the great man died, Andrew Darling's opportunity came. The deputy upholsterer became at once the master undertaker. His heart was in his work, and if he had any soul above there is no trace of it in his plain, unvarnished tale of what he did and how he did it. That is why his narrative is both picturesque and unique.

Those who imprisoned Napoleon at St. Helena, and gave him a Hudson Lowe for his jailer could not see him then as we can see him now. They saw him in the light of the evil he wrought their people, not in the light of his amazing and unique personality—"the Ghost of historic man," as Lord Acton called him. They dared not be generous to him, and could not even be just. They refused him the title of Emperor which they had recognized while he held it, and would not even allow him to be called by his own name of Napoleon.

He Was "General Buonaparte"

to them and nothing more. It is true that a Hudson Lowe was no fit jailer for a Napoleon. But he was neither a fool nor a knave. He was a good man in his way—perhaps a good man in the worst sense of the word—and a fine soldier of the martinet type. But his attitude towards his prisoner was impossible, though even so it was not worse than that of his master Bathurst, the Secretary of State. Napoleon said of him, as Lady Malcolm records: "He has not the character of an Englishman. He is a Prussian soldier"—and we now know all that that means, even as Napoleon knew it then. Wellington, who defeated him in public, said of him later, "Sir Hudson Lowe was a very bad choice; he was a man standing in education and judgment. He was a stupid man; he knew nothing of the world, and like all men who know nothing of the world, he was suspicious and jealous." These appreciations might be multiplied. "The verdict of history," as Lord Rosebery says, "is almost uniformly unfavorable." But, after all, perhaps the last word on the subject was spoken by Montholon when he said, as Stokoe records: "My good fellow, an angel from heaven would not have satisfied us as Governor of St. Helena."

On May 5, 1821, Napoleon died a few minutes after sunset. Darling had known for some days that the end was near, and bestirred himself accordingly. Daily he went to Longwood—it was five miles from Jamestown, where he lived—and had already received orders, rooms to be hung in black, and so forth, in anticipation of the pending obsequies.

The Death Mask.

In the forenoon of May 6 he rode off as usual, and on his way he met a messenger with orders for him to procure some plaster of Paris, which would soon be wanted for the making of a death-mask. There was none to be had on the island, but Darling had already had his eye on certain images to be purchased in the town, which, being ground down, might furnish the material required. But his frugal mind shrank from incurring the expense without authority. So he went to Longwood, where the Governor was staying in the new house built for, but never occupied by, Napoleon, to obtain the necessary authority. Having got it, back he rode to the town, bought the necessary images, 160 in number, ground them down, and before evening dispatched two Chinamen with the resulting powder to Longwood.

We may as well finish here this story of the death-mask; for it is at this point that Darling's narrative throws some new, but not perhaps very conclusive light on what has long been a moot question. Darling tells us that what he calls the "bust," by which, as the context shows, he clearly means the death-mask, was taken on May 7—some 40 hours after Napoleon's death—by Drs. Burton and Antommarchi—so he calls him, but his real name was Antommarchi —"and afterwards a bust was taken from the same which was very fair considering the time he had been dead and the roughness of the material." Montholon gave him the order for the coffins in writing, and "to be more particular to his exact size" excited him in the measurement of the body. "The net size was as follows:—Length, 5 feet 7 inches, only 18 inches barely across the shoulders, and scarcely 10 inches deep."

"Expende Hannibalem; quot libras in duce summo invenies?"

Napoleon's Coffins.

Darling's own account of the coffins is as follows:

"The description of the coffins were to be, first, tin, lined with satin, which was to be stuffed with cotton, a small mattress and pillow of the same materials on the bottom of ditto; and then, second, a wood coffin; then, third, a lead coffin; and then one of mahogany covered with crimson velvet, if it could be procured; but I told them there was not any on the island that I could get, as I had been in search of some a few days before; it was then settled that outer coffin should be the best mahogany that was on the island, which was accordingly done so."

It will be seen that his account merely mentions "wood" as the material of the second coffin. But nearly all the official and contemporary accounts of the disinterment in 1840 of Napoleon's remains for the purpose of their translation to Paris, affirm that this, too, like Darling's original outer coffin, was made of mahogany.

THE AGY TREE.

Among the many peculiar and disconcerting plants and creatures that abound in Madagascar, probably none is more surprising and disconcerting than the agy tree, so-called, which is not a tree, but a climbing plant. The following incident, quoted by Mr. James Sibree, F.R.G.S., in "A Naturalist in Madagascar," illustrates the painful result of contact with the agy. The story is told by a Mr. Montgomery:

Walking under some trees and pushing aside the reeds and grass, I was startled by a sudden tingling and pricking sensation over the backs of my hands and fingers. I stopped in sudden surprise, for the pain was severe, and I had touched nothing except the grass. But in another minute the pain increased, the tingling, burning sensation seemed to be extending rapidly up my wrists, and I could see nothing to cause it. As I lowered my head to look, scalding pain shot into my ears and neck, and grew worse every instant. Dazed and bewildered, I stood a few seconds in helplessness, for I could neither see nor guess at the cause of the terrible distress. Then I got back to my company with agony written plain enough on every line of my face.

The men started up when they saw me, crying out, "You have been stung by the agy!" Some of them led me to a seat, others rushed for water from the river, and two or three brought sand heaped up in their hands. Then they chafed me with the sand and water to take out the stinging hairs, which they knew caused the mischief. As they rubbed me, I felt the pain abate, and after they had chafed me for about a quarter of an hour I was comparatively free from pain. While the men were rubbing me, I was able to discern to some extent the cause of my distress. Countless hairs, like tiny arrows, almost transparent, pointed at either end, and from a third to a fourth of an inch long, had dropped on me in an invisible shower from the agy tree as I stood under it. Before I came away that afternoon, very cautiously I ventured to examine the tree at a little distance, and found that the tiny hairs grew outside a thickish pod or shell, not quite so large as a small banana. The pods were fully ripe (unluckily for me) just at that time, and the light wind was scattering their coverings.

BY FORTUNE OF WAR.

Many a Chance Occurrence Has Had a Marked Effect.

It has often been stated that a strike really caused the Spanish-American War. Two destroyers were on order in England, destined for work on the Cuba coast, but a strike delayed their completion.

The Spanish have declared that had these vessels been delivered in time it would have enabled them to prevent gun-running in Cuba. In consequence the revolt would have been crushed, and there would have been no reason for the United States to interfere.

The German Empire might never have come into being had some French artillerymen been able to shoot straight during one of the fights outside Paris a troop of cavalry came within range of the guns of Mont Valerian. Fire was opened, and a few men fell, disclosing a carriage, but it was driven out of range as quickly as possible.

The carriage contained the Emperor, or, rather, King of Prussia, as he was then, Bismarck, and Moltke.

Disappointed.

An old Scotswoman, who at considerable personal inconvenience had gone a good way to visit a friend who was ill, learned on her arrival that the alarming symptoms had subsided.

"Ay! hoo are ye the day, Mrs. Crawford?" she enquired, in breathless anxiety.

"Oh, I'm nearly well noo, thank ye, Mrs. Graham."

"Nearly well!" exclaimed the breathless visitor. "After me comin' sae far to see ye, too!"

Charge of the Canadians in Flanders

BY J. B. PERRY.

[Bernard Partridge's cartoon, "Canada," is reproduced in connection with the lines, by special permission of the proprietors of Punch]:

Canada heard the world-wide call,
"Ready!" she cried. Our best, our all,
We freely give; to stand or fall
For Truth and Liberty!"

"To arms! To arms!" the bugles sang,
From East and West the echoes rang;
Our foemen, hearing; forward sprang
To fight Hun Tyranny.

Over the land and sea they came,
To play the brave man's gallant game
To wage red war in Heaven's name!
To save Humanity!

On to the battle front they roll'd,
Flow'r of the Free, strong, firm and bold,
To 'venge the wrong'd! and right uphold,
With Guns and Musketry.

Sudden and swift, mid storms of shell,
The cow'rdly Huns— foul fiends of Hell!
Let loose vile fumes that deadly fell
On our brave Infantry.

Then, O! Great God! Through crash and boom,
Through iron rain and deadly fume,
Our fearless boys charged through the gloom,
To deal with Infamy.

"Strike home!" they cried, through fume and flame,
"Strike down the hellish hordes of shame!
Strike for Heaven! for Britain's name!
And for Poster'ty!"

Down through the reeling Huns they came;
Triumphantly they played the game;
And "saw'd the day"! won endless fame,
And Immortality!

FLOWER CLOCKS.

The Common Dandelion Orders Its Daily Life Systematically.

Anybody who has flowers enough and a sufficient knowledge of them need never be at a loss to ascertain approximately the correct time, for there are any number of blossoms that open and shut at regular hours. A practical botanist has made a list of a few of them and says that as far as he is concerned he is willing to order his time according to it.

The dandelion opens for the day's work about 5.30 a.m. and closes at 8.30 p.m., being a model of deportment, indeed. To be sure, there are other plants that get busy earlier, but they observe shorter hours. In the temperate regions, the plant that wakes up first is the dainty, satin-petaled morning-glory. It starts to disclose its tints at 2 a.m., and with the increased strength of the morning light continues to open, but when the sun becomes hot the tubes begin to close, and at 10 a.m. they are through for the day.

The Rutland Beauty is an hour glass. It opens its eyes at 3 o'clock in the morning and closes them at 11. Rutland Beauty sounds like a new kind of apple or potato, but it is a twining, trailing flower that grows both wild and under cultivation. The blossom is white or light rose-colored and the leaves are triangular or arrow shaped. Any industrious person who likes to tell time at 4 a.m. can do so by the oyster plant. It wakes up then, but finishes its day at noon and goes to sleep again. Those who do not recognize the oyster plant, either by that name or by its botanical name of Tragopogon porrifolium, will always know what you mean if you call it goats' beard.

The poppy, scarlet and gorgeous, opens its petals at 5 a.m., but has no regular hour for closing time. Bitter-sweet can be relied upon to come to life about 6 a.m., thus preceding the water lily by an hour. The water lily is leisurely about preparing for the day, but she has usually made her toilet and is smiling at the sun by 7 a.m. Eight o'clock in the morning is announced by the scarlet pimpernel. This plant, however, is less reliable as a clock than as a barometer. It is no dependable in the latter respect that it is commonly called the poor man's weather glass, but its extreme sensitiveness to darkness will keep it from telling the time on a cloudy day.

TORPEDO FACTS.

The first torpedo was invented by David Bushnell, in 1777. Eight years later Robert Fulton designed a missile of the kind, which was purchased by the French Admiralty. After Fulton came many inventors. Messrs. McKay and Beardslee constructed an electric torpedo in 1865; Sir Frederick Abel made one of a better pattern in 1867, and in 1873 the Wightman torpedo was adopted by the British Government. This torpedo held its own until 1884, when the famous Whitehead fish-torpedo was invented.

The Whitehead is propelled by an ingenious little engine, worked by compressed air, placed inside it near the propellers. When it is fired from the tube on a torpedo boat or other craft an automatic arrangement pulls over a lever, and when it reaches the water its engines work at top speed—roughly about twenty-five knots an hour. A gyroscope steers the torpedo by manipulating the rudders at the stern.

Wealthy Australian Enlists.

Giving his name as John Wren a man applied at the Melbourne Town Hall a few days ago for enlistment. He said his business was "racing." "Are you the owner of the race course?" asked the surprised recruiting officer. "Yes," he replied. He is perhaps the most widely known of Australia's wealthiest men. He owns several race courses, a newspaper or two and is interested in a great variety of industrial enterprises. He gave $2,500 as a prize to the first Australian to win the Victoria Cross. Mr. Wren passed all the tests and promptly was ticketed as a private.

MILITARY MOUNTAINEERS.

Fine Feats By the Alpine Troops of France and Italy.

Some of the most picturesque soldiers who are fighting in the great war are the Alpine troops of France and Italy. They have already seen much useful service in the Vosges and the Carnic Alps, and if another winter campaign is fought, they are likely to be called upon for still more difficult and important fighting.

The numbers of the French chasseurs alpins on war footing have not been revealed by the authorities. In times of peace there are thirty battalions of chasseurs a pied, stationed for the most part in the mountainous country that forms the eastern frontier of France. Their training among the high peaks has made them as familiar with ski and rope as with the rifle.

Theirs is a life of continual risk. Occasionally a whole corps has been overtaken by avalanche and swept away. In 1901, says a writer in the London Field, there were two such accidents within a very short time. In one case the fourth company of the 13th Alpine Regiment, which is usually stationed at Chambery, apparently brought an avalanche down upon itself by the vibration that its marching caused. It was some time before help arrived in sufficient strength to dig out the men, and when they were rescued, it was found that thirty were more or less injured, and that of the thirty, twelve were suffering from frostbitten feet.

In the other case, a detachment of the 97th Regiment was on its way to revictual the mountain post on the Col de Frejus (8,200 feet), on the Italian frontier, above the Mont Cenis tunnel, when an avalanche swept down, burying a sergeant and ten men, of whom only five made good their escape. They were roped together, but in two groups, and when the mass of snow and ice struck them, both parties were swept along, the one to death, and the other down the mountain side until a telegraph post intervened the rope and saved their lives.

On the other side of the frontier the Bersaglieri of the Italian army have just as trying a time in winter. There is apparently nothing in connection with mountaineering that the Italian Alpine chasseurs are not prepared to undertake. Some years ago, Professor Mosso, being desirous of conducting certain experiments to show the effect of high altitude on the human constitution, invoked the aid of the Italian Government, and in due course a detachment of chasseurs under his orders were led to the summit of Monte Rosa, and there set to do gymnastic exercises. In the summer of 1905 forty chasseurs of the Italian army reached the summit of Mont Blanc, and were there drilled by their officers.

Another fine feat of mountaineering was credited to the Italian military mountaineers in 1904, when, in order to descend to La Thuile, the first town beyond the Pass of the Little St. Bernard, a whole battalion of Alpine troops, engaged in manoeuvres in the High Piedmont, marched over the highest glacier in the Italian Alps, namely, that of Rutor. The six hundred men who formed the battalion carried their full army kit and were roped together, with the officers in the lead. The journey that began at Valgrisanche, about five thousand feet, and included the Glacier de Rutor, 10,800 feet, occupied sixteen hours, and was accomplished amidst intense cold and snow. The feat particularly excited the admiration of the French troops, who were exercising on the other side of the frontier, and who were in an excellent position to judge of the difficulties that were encountered en route.

SUFFERING IN PORTUGAL.

Food Rioters Use Bombs Against Lisbon Police.

Portugal is more remote from the scene of war than any other country in Europe, but it is suffering a scarcity of food that is as serious as that in some of the belligerent countries.

Provision stores and depots are the scenes of almost daily riots in protest against the conditions. Recently a mob of 2,000 men, some of them armed with pick axes and other implements, stormed the provision store of an important English dealer in the Almada district and plundered the place. The Republican Guard, which crossed the river to restore order, was received by the mob by shots and bombs. The guard fired several volleys and numerous persons on both sides were wounded.

The scarcity of food is due in part to the fact that successive Governments of Portugal have bound themselves to supply Great Britain with certain quantities of provisions sent to Gibraltar. Under this agreement large numbers of cattle and miscellaneous provisions are sent out of the country every week, with the result that there has been almost no meat in the markets of Lisbon.

The egg supply is also less than half of what it is in ordinary times, the shortage being partly due to the fact that a good many eggs are sent surreptitiously over the border into Spain, where they may be sold for double the price fixed officially by the Government in the food markets there.

QUIZZING THE CHEMIST.

Sir Hiram Maxim, the Noted Inventor Tells this Story.

Having occasion to use some metallic mercury in his London laboratory, Sir Hiram Maxim sent his man Silverman out to purchase "one pound of metallic mercury in a strong glass bottle with a cork stopper." In "My Life" he tells the story of what happened.

Silverman soon returned and said that he could not find any metallic mercury. I asked him whether he had tried at a shoe shop or a beer shop.

"No," he replied, "at a wholesale chemist's."

I told him that he must have made a mess of it somehow, and I sat down and wrote out carefully, "Wanted—one pound of metallic mercury in a strong glass bottle with a cork stopper."

Before long he came back and said there was no such stuff as "metallic mercury" known in the chemist's shop, and that he had been to a wholesale place. As the shop was not more than two hundred yards away, I went round with him, and said to the man behind the counter:

"I have sent this young man here twice for some metallic mercury, and he tells me that you have nothing of the kind."

"No, we never have any call for it," he replied.

"But is not this a chemist's shop?"

"Yes; one of the largest in London."

"Do you sell all kinds of chemicals?"

"Yes."

"Then how does it happen that you have no metallic mercury?"

"We have never had any call for it before. We do not know what it is."

"Have you any bicarbonate of soda?"

"Yes, tons of it."

"Have you any bicarbonate of potash?"

"Certainly. Any amount of it."

"What is bicarbonate of potash a bicarbonate of?"

"Why, naturally, of potash."

"Could you let me have some potash before it is made up into a bicarbonate?"

"Certainly."

"Have you any bichloride of mercury?"

"Yes. Lots of it."

"What is bichloride of mercury a bichloride of?"

Here I had him. I asked him if it were his first day on duty.

"No, I have been here twenty years."

The head man, who had overheard our conversation, then came up and said, "Why, of course, the gentleman wants quicksilver."

Curiously enough, it had never occurred to me to call it by that name, although I ought to have thought of it. However, it is never called quicksilver by scientific men.

ICE BALLAST ANCHORAGE.

May Use Ice for the Foundation of Guns.

A proposition was advanced some years ago that a temporary repair should be made in a vessel holed below water line by forming around and thickly over the whole a block of frozen sea water by means of refrigerating engines and a number of small copper pipes traversing the collision mat.

"May I further suggest," says an authority, "the use of a similar method of extemporizing gun emplacements in this war. Take the case of the amphibious fighting at the Dardanelles. Monitors of light draft have to be run close inshore, and they might be fixed in position by dumping large quantities of cement and rubble. But this method of stabilizing the monitor permanently 'on the rocks' would sacrifice the vital advantage of changing position. If the monitor were simply frozen into sand or other loose bottom then by introducing steam to the copper tubing it could be released when required. Taking the net cost of icemaking by electric transmission of power from a refrigerating ship—that is, a converted collier—at 50 cents per ton, 3500 would pay the price for 1,000 tons of ice ballast anchorage. The system might even find application on land.

Of Course.

There is a certain dear old lady who owns a little farm and takes a few boarders in summer.

Recently an anxious young mother who has been industriously delving into medical literature of late, inquired of the old lady whether or not the milk served at her table was Pasteurized.

"Of course!" was the old lady's indignant reply. "Don't we keep the cows we've got in the pasture all summer long?"

Lecture on a Poet.

The little agricultural village had been billed with "Lecture on Keats" for over a fortnight. The evening arrived at length, bringing the lecturer ready to discuss the poet. The advertised chairman, taken ill at the last moment, was replaced by a local farmer. This farmer introduced the lecturer and terminated his remarks by saying:

"And now, my friends, we shall soon all know what I personally have often wondered, what are Keats?"

The Housewife's Corner

Recipes for Thrifty Cooks.

Mayonnaise of Lamb.—Slice a cucumber and line a dish with it. Sprinkle lightly with a little finely chopped onion, and over this pour a dressing of three parts oil and one vinegar, seasoned with salt and pepper. Cut some neat slices from a leg or shoulder of lamb and arrange these over the cucumber. Make a mayonnaise sauce and put a dessertspoonful of this in each slice of meat. Garnish the dish with tomatoes thinly sliced, and serve with a salad of cold peas and lettuce.

Potato Croquettes.—These are very delicious indeed and should be served separately as a little savory. Mince some remains of cold veal or chicken with a little chopped parsley, a teaspoonful of finely minced onion and a little veal or other meat jelly. Put in a pie dish and stand in the oven for the meat to warm through, then mash some cold potatoes with a tablespoonful of cream, a dusting of black pepper, salt, a few sweet herbs, and an ounce of butter. Take a dessertspoonful of the meat and make a case of potato round it, brush over with egg and fry until of a rich brown color. The croquettes must be served very hot.

Liver With Bechamel Sauce.—Cook two tablespoonfuls of bacon fat and two of flour. Add a dash of nutmeg and cayenne. Stir in one cupful of white chicken stock. Mix in one yolk of egg with one-half cupful cream, two cupfuls of cooked liver cut in rather large dices. Add one tablespoonful of Worcestershire sauce and flavor with lemon juice or tarragon vinegar. Stir in one tablespoonful of butter. Serve with small pieces of toast round edges of the dish.

Hot Creamed Cabbage.—Chop fine one small cabbage, cover with boiling water and put in soda the size of a pea; boil for fifteen minutes, then drain off the water. Melt a tablespoonful of butter, add a tablespoonful of flour, stir until smooth, add a cup of rich milk, and when it is very hot pour over the cabbage, which has been put into a vegetable dish, and serve. This may be varied by putting the cabbage into a baking dish after it has been mixed with the cream, grating cheese over the top and letting it remain in the oven until the top is browned.

Apples Baked With Bacon.—Select apples of medium size, core and cut them in three slices each. Put a layer of thinly sliced bacon upon each slice. Put them together and bake them until the apples are tender. Serve whole, one apple to a person. The apple should be baked stem up. This combination looks attractive and makes a delicious luncheon dish, especially if cornbread is served at the same time.

Tea Rolls.—One quart of flour, one tablespoonful of lard, two tablespoonfuls of butter, one tablespoonful of sugar, a little salt, one-third cake of compressed yeast dissolved in half a cupful of warm water, one pint of boiling milk. All the ingredients should be stirred in with the boiling milk except the yeast, which is added when the sponge is a little cool. Knead three or four times. Half an hour before rolls are wanted roll out and cut with cake cutter. Fold together with piece of butter in middle, let them rise till light, brush over with an egg and bake.

Salmon a la Italienne.—Carefully remove all skin and bone from some cold boiled salmon, and flake or cut into small neat pieces about an inch thick. Slice an onion and fry it in about an ounce of good salt butter. When lightly browned, stir into the pan about half a pint of good stock—the liquor in which the fish was boiled, and to which milk and seasoning have been added will answer the purpose if no stock is available—a tablespoonful of lemon juice, half a pint of picked shrimps and a teaspoonful of mushroom catsup. Simmer gently for fifteen minutes and then add the fish. Continue to cook gently until the salmon is quite hot. Serve with sippets of toast.

Pancakes.

Sour Milk Pancakes.—Take one pint of sour milk, one and a half cupfuls of bread crumbs, one tablespoonful of melted butter, a little salt, three eggs, enough flour for good consistency, half a teaspoonful of soda.

French Pancakes.—Use two eggs, two ounces of butter, two ounces sifted sugar, two ounces flour, one teaspoonful of baking powder, half a pint of new milk. Mix thoroughly and bake in buttered plates in a quick oven for twenty minutes.

English Pancakes.—Measure three eggs, half a cupful of sugar, piece of butter the size of an egg, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, half-pound of currants, and nutmeg. Beat butter and sugar, add the other ingredients and enough flour to make a thin batter. Fry in lard. Good substitute for a pudding.

Cornmeal Pancakes. — Take two cupfuls of cornmeal and a teaspoonful of salt; pour over it boiling water to make a batter, let stand to cool, then add the yolks of three eggs, beaten, enough flour to make of the proper consistency, and one and one-half-teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Just before baking add the whites of the eggs, beaten stiff.

Useful Hints.

Salt sprinkled with lemon juice will remove iron rust. Wet the spots with it and then hold over a vessel of hot water.

If your hands perspire while sewing keep by you a flannel bag of powdered alum with which to dust the hands at intervals.

After cleaning a room leave the windows and doors open, and do not lay down carpets and rugs until the boards are thoroughly dry.

Figs soaked in water overnight and eaten first thing in the morning, before other food, will often prove a relief for constipation, especially in young children.

Never whitewash the walls of a clothes cupboard, or your brushing will never end. A cupboard that is already whitewashed may have a sheet pinned up on the wall to protect the clothes.

I have discovered that if clothespins are thrown into the boiler while the clothes are being rinsed the pins will not split. I used to lose almost one-third of my pins, but I seldom lose one now.—H.K.

Have your potatoes baked in a quick oven and served as soon as they are thoroughly cooked. It is impossible to do away with the starch, which is almost the whole potato, but cooked in this way they are much more easily digested.

Save all pips, peelings and scraps of apples when cooking them. Well picked over and boiled this "waste" yields juice which, after straining and reboiling with 1 lb. of sugar to every pint of liquid, makes the most delicious apple jelly.

When making apple jelly from whole fruit save all the pulp and make a pudding of it by baking layer wise in a buttered pie dish with dry bread crumbs between each layer. Sugar and spice, like powdered cinnamon and cloves, make this pudding specially nice.

Make the following for the children. Soak half a pound of sago in cold water for three hours, then boil one pound of fruit with sugar to taste. When cooked pass the fruit through a sieve, add the sago, and return to the saucepan. Simmer altogether till the sago is clear, then pour into a wetted mould. Turn out carefully when cold.

Kitchen chairs and table legs often become shabby-looking. To brighten them up first put one pennyforth of permanganate of potash crystals into a jug of hot water, and leave them till they are quite dissolved. Now scrub the chairs clean, and dry them. Stain them with the dissolved crystals, and when they are dry apply a coating of ordinary varnish.

FOOD PRICES IN GERMANY.

Most Necessary Foodstuffs Have Risen Most in Price.

The German papers are giving liberal space to the family budgets of soldiers' wives, tables showing the steady rise in prices, etc. For example, Dr. Carl von Tyszka, writing in a Berlin paper, deplores the fact that the most necessary foodstuffs of all descriptions, especially those on which the poor chiefly depend, have risen most in price. A family of four persons with a yearly average income of $500 to $600 must now spend $27.50 (110 marks) for monthly food supplies, which before the war cost only $16.75 (67 marks). Dr. von Tyszka notes further that there has been a heavy rise in the price of heating and lighting materials, and in the cost of clothing, especially of shoes. Walking shoes, which before the war cost $3 to $3.50 cannot now be purchased under $4 to $5. The writer closes with a warning that an insufficiently nourished people cannot be vigorous and healthy. We quote these words:

"The frequent statement that a limitation of meat-eating would be beneficial from a physiological standpoint, as we were eating too much meat before the war, applies only to the relatively small number of the well-to-do. For a few hundred thousand overnourished human beings a limitation in the amount of bread and meat consumed might perhaps be wholesome, but the masses of the people do not eat too much meat even in times of peace, on the contrary they eat too little. A further decline in the use of this most valuable form of nutriment might have permanently detrimental influence on the national vigor."

Sturdy British Rector.

At a British recruiting meeting held at Loughborough, Leicestershire, Rev. R. J. Sturdee, vicar of St. Peter's, Loughborough, said that this war was no ordinary war, because we were not fighting human beings but Germans. A member of the audience interjected the word "devils." The speaker retorted, "No, don't insult the devil! We are fighting Germans."

9178-9085

A SMART, S... ...BLE DRESS.

A casual study of the women styles seen at present on the fashionable promenades reveals the fact that style creations have relocated the waist line and have altered the nether proportions of the skirt.

During the next few months dresses should be worn showing the waist line where it is normally found, and the skirt should be somewhat narrower than was widely in vogue a short time ago.

Neat gathered effects are being introduced into the waists, and skirts generally are being made with slight suggestions of drapery.

All of these advance style features are pleasingly embodied in the Ladies' Home Journal models No. 9178 and No. 9085. Illustrated herewith.

Pattern No. 9178, an exceedingly popular waist, is a gathered model with the back extending over the shoulder to form a shallow yoke, and has full-length or shorter sleeves with turn-back cuffs. The convertible collar is fastened by a link. Cuts in sizes 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. Size 38 requires 2¼ yards 36-inch material. The skirt, No. 9085, is a ladies' three-piece draped model with panel front. Cuts in sizes 24, 26, 28, 30 and 32 inches waist measure. Size 24 requires 4¾ yards 36-inch material.

These patterns and many other practical and handsome styles may be obtained from your local Ladies' Home Journal dealer, or from the Home Pattern Company, 183 George Street, Toronto, Ontario.

SOUTH AFRICAN CONTINGENT.

One Private Relinquished a $25,000-a-Year Position.

In the ranks of the South African contingent, now in a training camp in Hertfordshire, England, there are more men who have relinquished large salaries to serve the mother country at a shilling a day than in any other large command of the size in the imperial army. One private before his enlistment drew a salary of over $25,000 a year as manager of one of the most important firms in the South African colony. Magistrates, well-to-do farmers, and miners, civil servants of high position, and even men who fought as officers in the campaign under Botha against German Southwest Africa, but had no commission open to them in the new contingent, are in the ranks.

The South African contingent is filled with young Boers, as well as colonials whose British parents were pioneers in that world. Its motto, "Kendracht Maakt Macht"—union makes strength—is Dutch.

Cold weather affected the troops at first, after their work in the burning deserts of German Africa, but with warm clothing they rather prefer it, as they enjoy sharper appetites.

The contingent will be sent to the front as soon as acclimatized.

THE PUBLIC ASTONISHED.

Londoner Should Have Received the Victoria Cross Medal.

Why the young navy officer who swam ashore from a British submarine in the sea of Marmora and blew up the Ismid Railway bridge in spite of the Turkish guard should receive only the distinguished service order has astonished the public, since so many lesser heroes have received the greater honor of the Victoria Cross. But the award was made under a rule that has long obtained in the services. Even Lieutenant Holbrooke would have obtained merely the D.S.O. for taking his submarine through the mine field of the Dardanelles and sinking a Turkish warship had not the King himself intervened.

By the unwritten law of the service, the Victoria Cross is awarded for a deed of great gallantry performed without orders, and generally for saving lives under fire. The D.S.O. is for gallantry in following orders. Yet Lieutenant Guy Hughes, in blowing up the Ismid bridge, acted on his own initiative from the time he left his boat until he was picked up again, and in popular opinion should have received the more coveted medal. It is a good deal like the case of Lieutenant Warneford in attacking and wrecking a Zeppelin, which resulted in a V.C.

CHILDREN'S FASHION NOTES.

Grown folks cannot properly lay sole claim to the desire to dress neatly. Our small dear understudies are quite as discriminate and demanding in their appearance as ourselves.

Many a little heart will beat happily if mother will provide it with a neat little frock like the one illustrated herewith.

This is a pattern selected from the Ladies' Home Journal, No. 9011, and consists of a sleeveless overdress with princess panel in front and a guimpe opening in the front. Cuts in sizes 6, 8, 10 and 12 years, size 10 requiring 2½ yards 36-inch material with 1¾ yards 36-inch material for guimpe.

This pattern and many other practical and handsome styles may be obtained from your local Ladies' Home Journal Pattern dealer, or from the Home Pattern Company, 183 George Street, Toronto, Ontario.

THE MEXICAN SNAIL.

France Imports Them to War on Vineyard Pests.

No healthy, free-living creature is common or unclean in a naturalist's eyes, and to apply the word to a snail gliding along with its horns out and its house on its back is mere prejudice. At the same time it has to be admitted that snails do a great deal of damage in fields and gardens, and would do much more if it were not for their enemies, such as birds and hedgehogs.

In this connection some interesting observations have been made on the extraordinary appetite for snails and slugs exhibited by a Mexican snail with a shell about two inches long, which a naturalist has been trying for four years to acclimatize in France.

The point is that it seems to have an extraordinary keen liking for everything in the snail life. It was tried with salad and fruit on the one hand, and with minced meat of various kinds on the other, but it would have none of them.

Snails and slugs, however, it devoured with avidity. A watersnail occupied its attention for about ten minutes; the common garden snail, with its strong, muscular, creeping sole, took longer. In seventeen days five of these snail-eating snails—scientifically known as Glandinae—accounted for 109 snails, and one hungry individual was seen to eat a dozen vineyard snails in twenty-four hours.

It must be noted, however, that there were usually long intervals between meals, and that one garden snail every two or three days was generally enough.

In most cases the Gladina grips its victim before the victim has time to draw its body into the shelter of the shell, but it is also able to deal with a snail that has drawn itself in, for it contrives to break down the doorway of the shell.

NEW WAR DISEASE.

Aeroplane Pilots Are Treated for Air Sickness.

During the war several military aviators have been suffering from air sickness. This new malady is liable to attack any aeroplane pilot who flies for a length of time without descending. The aviator thus attacked is affected with a sickly nausea accompanied by severe headache, and a violent desire to sleep. Swift descent through the air will bring on these symptoms, which medical men say are caused by the blood circulation of an aviator being unable to at once adapt itself to the rapid change of atmospheric pressure caused by sudden drops in the air.

Telegraphist's spasm is another malady which has afflicted many telegraph and wireless operators in the war. The complaint is caused by the continual operation of the little handle used in connection with telegraphic apparatus. Few people realize the strain entailed by tapping for hours at a stretch with one hand the instrument which sends code messages across the wire. Most letters consist of more than one dot or dash, and it has been estimated that a telegraphist makes about 30,000 movements of the fingers and wrist in the course of an hour's operating.

This strain often results in the hand becoming stiff and uncontrollable, as it does in the case of writer's cramp. Many telegraphists now learn to operate with both hands in order to avoid this complaint.

A malady prevalent amongst the drivers of the military motor cars and transport wagons is chauffeur's fracture. When swinging the starting handle of powerful motor cars, the driver often has his right hand forced backwards by the engine back-firing. Sometimes the wrist is broken in this way, but more often the muscles of the wrist are strained or the ligaments torn. As a result the hand becomes almost useless for any purpose demanding strain, and rest is absolutely necessary.

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, DECEMBER 26.

Lesson XIII. — Jehovah's Gracious Promises to Israel. Review.

Read Hosea 14.

Golden Text: Psa. 103. 8.

There are some promises that were thousands of years ago that have been faithfully kept, and some that are still waiting to be fulfilled that will be just as faithfully kept. The One who has made and kept these promises never has failed and never will fail to keep his word with his people.

God has made these gracious promises. He made them to his people in the days long ago, sending prophets, priests, and kings to them to deliver messages and to help him in fulfilling the promises. Elijah, Elisha, Jehoiada, Joash, Daniel, Jonah, Amos, and Hosea were among the number through whom God sent and fulfilled some of his promises. We have studied about each of these in the quarter just closing.

Through Elijah, the faithful, fearless prophet God rebuked a wicked king, brought righteousness to pass, and chose a new helper who was to take up the work which Elijah laid down.

Through Elisha God fed the hungry, helped the weak, healed the sick, and delivered a city from the enemy.

Through Jehoiada he preserved the life of a little boy who was one day to become a good and great king.

Through Joash the king he destroyed idols, rebuilt the temple, and brought the people back to the worship of the true Jehovah.

Through Daniel he taught the lessons of self-control and fulfilled the promises of reward to those who are constant and steadfast.

Through Jonah, the foreign missionary, he warned and caused the great city of Nineveh to repent and be delivered from an awful destruction.

Through Amos, the home missionary, he reminded the people who were living in luxury at the expense of their helpless fellow creatures that such deeds would bring their own punishment, and he called them to repent and remember his gracious promise to forgive those who turn to him repenting of their sins.

Through Hosea he sent a message of deep love, telling how he longed to have the people turn to him as a child turns to his father, promising them that he would forgive their sins and restore them to a place in his love.

Through Jesus Christ, the King of Love, he fulfilled the promise that he had made of the coming One who should come to redeem the people from their sins and to bring peace on earth and good will to men.

Every promise which God has made he has faithfully kept in the past and is faithfully keeping to-day. He has used people of all types to help him in fulfilling these promises.

INSECT LIFE.

Their Veracity Is as Astounding as Their Power of Reproduction.

Few persons, writes Mr. James Buckland, realize how enormous is the number of insect species or how amazing is their power of multiplication. The number of insect species is greater by far than that of the species of all other living creatures combined. Although more than 300,000 have been described, probably twice that number remain to be examined. Virtually all living animals, as well as most plants, supply food for these incomputable hordes. The fecundity of certain insect forms is astonishing. Riley once computed that the progeny of the hop aphis, which sees thirteen generations born to it in a single year, would, if unchecked to the end of the twelfth generation, multiply to the inconceivable number of ten sextillions of individuals. Supplementing that calculation, Forbush says that, if this brood were marshalled in line, ten to the inch, it would extend to a point so sunk in the profundity of space that light from the head of the procession, travelling at the rate of 154,000 miles a second, would take 2,500 years to reach the earth. A Canadian entomologist declares that in one season the descendants of a pair of potato bugs would, if unchecked, number 60,000,000. The daily ration in leaves of a caterpillar is equal to twice its own weight. If a horse were to eat as much, he would require a ton of hay every twenty-four hours. Forbush says that a certain flesh-eating larva will consume in twenty-four hours 200 times its original weight; a human child, to do as well, would have to eat, in the first day of its life, 1,500 pounds of beef. Trouvelot, who made a special study of the subject, affirms that the food taken by a single silkworm in fifty-six days equals 86,000 times its original weight at hatching. What destruction this one insect would cause if even a one-hundredth part of its eggs ever hatched! The facts show how great is the value to man of the insect-eating birds.

There are five quarts of blood in the human body. One half of this can be lost before death is inevitable.

Since the accession of Queen Victoria, there have been thirteen Liberal and five Conservative Governments.

Miss Bessie Bannerman is visiting friends here.

The Farmers' Club had a very successful meeting on December 27. The Club meets again on January 4th at Underwood.

Those Germans again have caused a little excitement in one of our small villages in the neighborhood. One lady thought is necessary to have a detective come from Ottawa as there was none in Toronto she considered smart enough. The officer came and began his search for bombs which were supposed to be manufactured there, but in vain. He then made his way to the lady who had sent for him desiring to obtain information on the subject pertaining to the construction of the bombs. This lady gave the statement that they looked and were shaped like axe handles. This, of course, must be another terrible German bomb. Just a word of caution to any one who might purchase an axe handle—have your dealer sound it out well with a hammer as it might prove to be a German bomb.

The pie social held in the schoolhouse on Friday evening was a most splendid success in every way, and will add a very nice sum to the Red Cross fund. The proceeds amounted to $47. The programme was highly enjoyed by the audience that crowded the school so that standing room was at a premium. All those who took part acquitted themselves in fine style. Miss Nixon, the teacher, deserves special credit for the success of the occasion, as the work of preparing the programme devolved largely upon her. The pie social is now considered to be a more popular and satisfactory form of entertainment than the box social.
